Save For A Purpose

SAVING MONEY is worth while, for it makes every day profitable to you. But first of all have an object for saving—set a goal for yourself. You have an ambition—an education, a home of your own, capital to start in business or for investment.

Start saving with a definite goal. Your savings will grow when you have a plan. Then, too, as you go along, the compound interest earned on your money will help you reach your ambition in a shorter time.

MARGARET'S WINTER AT SHROUVILLE

(By Hazel Atkinson, Winner of the First Prize From the First English Class of Arapahoe High School)

On a beautiful September morning Margaret Depper arrived in the little town of Shrouville, Tennessee, where she was to attend school the ensuing year. Her heart leaped high as she beheld the large red brick school house which looked very magnificent to her. Shrouville was a town of about three thousand people who were of a very progressive nature. As Margaret walked down the street she asked of a gentleman, "Could you tell me where Mrs. Cavanan lives?" "Certainly" replied the gentleman. "Go two blocks west and two south." "I beg your pardon, sir, but which is south and which is west?" asked Margaret. "A bright girl you are to be out if you don't know the directions", replied the man, and walked on leaving Margaret to find her way as best she could. After several hours of inquiring and retracing steps Margaret found the residence of Mrs. Cavanan. This was the lady for whom she was to work to pay for her board, while she was attending school. Mrs. Cavanan was an old lady and very much bound to her ways and ideas, however she seemed very glad to have Margaret with her.

On Monday of the following week Margaret entered school, she liked her work very much. She met many girls but the ones she knew best were the members of her own Junior class, among this group was one girl whom Margaret adored, the banker's daughter, Gean Phillips, however Gean paid very little attention to Margaret.

Time passed quickly and soon the week for examinations was at hand, everyone was in an excited state asking each other questions. Gean rushed madly up to Margaret and said "Oh! Marjorie, if I need some help will you give it to me?" Margaret felt the blood rush to her face and her eyes felt as she answered "If I am able to do it honestly I shall be glad to." "Oh, honestly, nothing, you are a stingy old thing, just because you know, you won't tell", "I don't like her a bit, do you?" said Gean to one of the other girls. "No, indeed I don't" replied the other girl.

Margaret wanted to help the girls but she could not for her mother had always taught her to be honest and honest she would still be. The papers were returned and Margaret's grades were announced as being the highest in most of her classes. "I don't care if she did make better grades than I did", said Gean, "neither do I", replied one of the other girls; "She is a regular old book worm". Margaret was standing where she could hear all that was being said, she went home that night with a sad heart, Mrs. Cavanan asked her if she were ill; "No", answered Margaret, trying to keep back the tears which forced their way from her innocent brown eyes. "Homesick, I suppose, well if you can't do any better than this you had better go home and stay", said the old lady.

Margaret went to her room and spent the evening alone, she wished she were back in her poor country home with her mother and sister but it had been their desire for her to have an education and she must still keep trying. The cold winter months came and with them the sports of the snow and ice. Margaret's class was invited to a skating party, as Margaret knew how to skate, she decided to go. "Well if there isn't Margaret," declared Gean, "and look how well she skates." "Oh Yes," said the boy. "I believe I'll have the next round with her." Away they went down the long passage that was frozen over, but alas, they went too far, the ice broke and poor Margaret was nearly drowned. "Good enough for her," said Gean, she thinks she is so smart.

Margaret was kept in several weeks as she received a few injuries from the accident. Mrs. Cavanan was very unpleasant and very few girls called to see her, no one sent flowers. Margaret wondered why, for had not she helped to send flowers to other members of the class when they were ill? At last the doctor said that she might go back to school, how glad she was. No one seemed to care at school, she was not met with many welcomes as she had hoped she would be. However that morning in assembly the superintendent announced that there would be a declamatory contest at the close of school any one who wished might enter. Margaret listened very intently and revoiced at once to try. Several entered and among them was Margaret's much adored friend, Gean. The next four weeks were long hard ones for Margaret, she worked night a day. The time was drawing near for the contest and Margaret longed for a new dress to wear but she knew that it would be impossible. One day at school she overheard the other girls talking about their dresses and she thought of her own old gown. At last the day came for the contest, Margaret dressed in an old white lawn, simple as it was, she looked very pretty, even Mrs. Cavanan in spite of her outward deceit for Margaret, remarked, "You look very pretty tonight Margaret." "Thank you," said Margaret with a blush.

As the line marched in that night, Margaret felt herself very conspicuous as she led the others, after some time her name was called, she arose and began to speak in a clear voice. At once all noises ceased; perfect silence prevailed; the whole house seemed filled with awe; when she finished, flowers were thrown her in abundance and the applause was the greatest that had been given. The other contestants gave their orations then the period of time that elapsed in waiting for the decision seemed hours to Margaret.

When the winner was announced as Gean Phillips, everyone seemed very much surprised. Margaret's eyes filled with tears and she started to go from the stage when Gean laid the medal in her hand remarking, "It is yours, the judges were bribed to give it to me but I did not earn it, so take it." So saying, Gean put her arms around Margaret and said, "let us be friends forever."

E. J. Harris has taken complete charge of the mechanical end of his garage business, taking possession the first of the week. Elmer proposes to conduct the business in a first class manner and when you take a job there you will be assured of first class workmanship.

Last Friday evening at the High School gym occurred another one of those fast basket ball games, the visiting team hailed from Flagler. The local high school team proved too much for their visitors and took them into camp to the tune of 28 to 8. The "champs" added another scalp to their list and now it looks to us that there is no question but that they are going to get away right and colors flying high

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS OF INTEREST

Remember that Dr. Crabbe, President of the Greeley State Teachers College is to be here for an address on Friday afternoon of next week February 17. You cannot afford to fail to hear him. The place is the high school, the time is 2:30 o'clock.

On Friday evening of this week the Burlington high school plays our high school team at the White City. Our boys beat the Burlington team over there but they have defeated every other team of the conference this year, so that this is to be the decisive battle for the local boys. If this game is won it will practically make the championship of this end of the conference secure. A close game is expected.

The game last Friday with Flagler was won by the local boys by a score of 26 to 8. The Flagler people were good losers and took their defeat in a fine spirit, recognizing that they were defeated simply because they could not keep up. We very much appreciated the words of commendation that the coach and Superintendent Allen gave our boys, and the community.

Nice fresh oysters can be had at the Liberty market.
