GENERAL J. W. LEWIS.

The American in its write up of Jackson had the following to say of Gen. J. W. Lewis:

One of the best known men in the Eighth Congressional District is Gen. J. W. Lewis, of Paris. General Lewis is a candidate for Congress, and is consequently identifying himself with the citizens of Madison County, which sort of thing he has a habit of doing thoroughly.

General Lewis is well known in State politics, having been three times a member of the State legislature, serving in the house in 1885, in the senate in 1887 and as florial representative from the counties of Henry and Weakley in 1889. He declined further honors of this character, though the solicitations for him to continue in harness were of a very gratifying nature.

In March, 1891, he was appointed to the office of attorney general in the old twelfth judicial circuit to fill out an unexpired term, and was subsequently twice elected by the people to the same position, and is now serving in that capacity, being recognized as one of the strongest advocates in the State before a jury. His speech in the famous Ciscoe murder case, tried at Nashville, in which he volunteered his services to the defendant on account of personal friendship was a gem of oratory, and was commented upon at the time by the Nashville papers.

General Lewis is one of the staunchest Democrats in the State, and nothing affords him more pleasure than to take the stump in defense of the principles of his party. Personally, he is a man whom it is a pleasure to know, because he has the happy faculty of always making it appear to a friend, or even a chance acquaintance, that in life there is much sunshine. It isn't every man who possesses that trait of character, and when one is found he is not easily forgotten. General Lewis is also a man who always stands ready to push forward an enterprise and that is certainly indicative of a good citizen.

It is doubtful if there is a man in his home county or those of his judicial circuit who never enjoyed as great a degree of popularity and esteem.

Wanted—Live, energetic young men and women for light, pleasant and profitable work in this county. Address at once, Ed H. Childress, Murfreesboro, Tenn.
