INTER-DEPENDENCE OF COUNTRY AND CITY

No One Class Or Group Can Prosper
Independently Of The Other Groups.

"Never before has the inter-dependence of country and city—of agriculture and industry—been so farcibly emphasized as during the past few months" declares Ellis' Garage, local dealer for Samson Power Farming Machinery.

"The present economic condition, resulting from post-war deflation, proves conclusively that the farmer is just as dependent upon the city as the city is dependent upon the farmer. In the highly specialized system of American civilization, no one class or group can prosper independently of the other groups.

"When the farmer refuses to buy, or is unable to buy, factories close down, working men are thrown out of employment, the consumption of food drops lower and lower, banks refuse to drop lower and lower, banks refuse to lend money and call in their outstanding loans, and business is at a standstill.

"This is more than a theory. Last fall in a small manufacturing town in the Middle West a factory was compelled to close because of lack of demand for its products—many men were thrown out of work—and the consumption of meat in that one town alone dropped off over $80,000 per month. When people are out of work, they simply cannot buy abundantly of the farmers' produce and the financial predicament of the agricultural communities is further aggravated.

"The farmer is dependent upon the city worker to buy what he raises—the manufacturer is largely dependent upon the agricultural communities to buy what he makes—and if his goods are not sold, his employees are thrown out of work and their buying power is crippled, which immediately effects the sale of farm produce—banks 'tighten up' and the condition becomes worse than before.

"Thus we have an endless circle of dependencies—which explains our recent business depression.

"Right now, everyone wants business to 'open up'—but most of us wait for the other fellow to make the first move.

"Mind you, I am not saying that the fault is with the farmer, or the manufacturer, or the banker, or the dealer—or any other one class. It's everybody's fault — It's everybody's problem—and if everyone will do his full share without waiting to see what the other fellow is going to do the problem will soon save itself.

"The farmer should buy what he needs, this is nothing more than common sense—because if a man really needs a thing he pays for it whether he buys or not.

"Credit, as applied to so basic an industry as agriculture should be stretched to the limit.

"The manufacturer should do everything within his power to keep the wheels of industry moving, even though it may be necessary to temporarily at a loss. By so doing he is keeping the city man employed, thereby insuring his purchasing power and safeguarding the future of the manufacturer's own interest.

"Of course, when you come right down to it, few of us are real philanthropists at heart. We Americans, of the great middle class—including farmers and implement dealers—are more interested in our own little problems than in the matter of 'saving the country.'

"But it isn't a question of philanthropy. It's a question of good business—a question of doing a thing because it will pay—a question of constructive selfishness—and I'm not trying to 'pass the buck' to the other fellow. Right now, I am lining up my little business in accordance with this prescription—I am going to sell farm operating equipment for considerably less than the manufacturing costs—with terms that take into consideration the financial condition of the farmers of this community. But of course, that's a subject for the advertising pages instead of editorial columns."

Working For You

FROM the moment you give your number to the telephone operator, an unseen force of men and women are working for you.

The operator who takes your call, the wire-chief who tests the line, the man who repairs the instruments, the operator at the distant central office, the traffic inspector, the central office manager—all these and a most complete equipment—are working that your call may be put through in the most satisfactory manner.

Bell telephone employees have one characteristic in common—willingness to oblige. This is true in all departments, from switchboard to business office.

Their courtesy, willingness to oblige and patience under trying conditions promote friendly feeling and are essential to good telephone service.

It is our pleasure to serve you.
