WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 14, 1888.
Senator Hal's committee, which investigated the democratic violations of the civil-service reform law, met this morning to consider their report to the Senate. The report will clearly show many plain and intentional violations of both the letter and the spirit of this law by the democratic officials.

The conferees on the fortification appropriation bill have reached an adjustment, and the bill, which is a compromise, was to-day reported to the House and Senate. The total amount of the appropriation carried by the bill as it stands now is $3,972,000, and the provision providing for the expenditure of $6,000,000 within three years for heavy guns.

Cleveland's good luck is certainly getting to be a thing of the past. First, he wrote his free trade message, which is the rock upon which the old, democratic hulk will be wrecked in November. That was hardly a piece of good luck. Second, he attempted to distract public attention from his first blunder by sending in a real genuine "jingo" message on the rejection of the fisheries treaty by the Senate, in which he wildly asked for more authority in order that he might punish the wicked Canadians for their treatment of American interests. He expected his request to be refused by the republicans, but his luck again went back on him. The republicans did not oppose granting him all the power he might imagine necessary for the protection of American interests, but during the discussion of the bill giving him that power the republicans took occasion to let the country know that Cleveland had the power in his hands for more than a year and a half to have brought Canada to her knees at any time, but he has declined to use it. The bill giving him the additional power asked for has been passed by the House without serious opposition, only four votes against it and will in due time pass the Senate, so that Cleveland has failed entirely to take the attention of the voters from his free-trade message. After the election it will be Cleveland's "back luck" that will take the place of the "good luck" with which the country has been surfeited.

Representative Bayne, of Pennsylvania, is enthusiastic over republican prospects, as indeed are most republicans here, particularly those who, like Mr. Bayne, are warm personal friends of Chairman Quay and are thus enabled to keep posted on the inside work of the campaign. Mr. Bayne gives good solid reasons for the expected victory in New York. He says: "In the first place, Mr. Harrison will get the votes of many republicans who voted against Mr. Blaine or did not vote at all in 1884; he will hold all the Irish votes that Blaine got, they are opposed to opening our markets to England.
Another important element, the probi-tion vote is going to be very small this year, not only in New York, but throughout the country. In 1884 it is said that there was no difference between the two great parties: that there was no issue. This led many temperance people to declare what they thought the great issue should be, and they voted for prohibition. But these people have other interests. There is an issue—a very clear issue—this year, and most of them are deeply interested in it. As republicans they will vote with us, and the loss to the prohibition vote will be gain for Harrison. I feel perfectly sure that we will carry New York, Indiana and Connecticut, and I believe that we will carry New Jersey and one or two of the southern states." Representative Rowell, who had just returned from the West, says that the expressed hopes of the eastern and southern democrats to carry Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, or Michigan will not be realized. On the contrary, Mr.
Rowell thinks that the republican vote in those states will this year be a gain on that of 1884. He also thinks the party will make congressional gain in the states mentioned.

Eight private pension bills were revoted by Cleveland Friday.
The Chinese restriction bill was railroaded through the House at lightning speed, and it also passed the Senate in the face of a telegram from the United States minister to China, saying that the treaty had not been rejected, but only postponed for further information.
Afterward Senator Blair moved for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill passed for the purpose of offering an amendment making it 60 days before the bill goes into effect. Owing to the absence of a quorum, this motion was not decided, but it will be to-day if there is a quorum present.

The republican substitute for the Mills tariff bill will be reported to the Senate about the 18th, says Senator Allison.

Senator Hoar has called the attention of the Senate to the fact that this resolution which was passed August 28, requesting the President to send copies of any remonstrances that had ever been made by his direction to England on account of Canadian mistreatment of American fishermen, has never been complied with.

Many bills have been introduced to break trusts, but unfortunately for the people none of them have become law and no trusts have been broken up.

Cleveland's long delayed letter of acceptance has just made its appearance, and a hurried reading fails to show any good reason for the long time taken to prepare it. It is rather the plea of the demagogue than the argument of the statesman. It will not help the rapidly-sinking democratic ship.

Rescued.

He had not a moment to spare, for the foremost and most eager of the pursuers gave one mighty bound, and landed on the neck of Ben's pony, just as he had gained the halter and brought the beast under control. Quick as a flash my brave companion dug his feet in the pony's side, and seizing the stalwart savage with both hands about the neck, played on his throat with the apparent intention of suffocating him. I gazed with astonishment at the whole scene, and in the excitement nearly forgot the immediate presence of the other foes, who as I perceived on looking backward, stood aghast at the unwelcome spectacle which greeted their eyes. I eagerly scrutinized my surroundings, anxious to espy Cardon, our help-mate, but could not see a glimpse of him. Confident that he had made good his escape, I gave the reins to my horse and hurried after Ben, who was galloping toward the stream, which he had about reached.

My retreat roused the redskins from their apathy and with a yell of disappointment and rage they followed after me and discharged their firearms, which they seemed to have forgotten in the early part of the fray. I heard the bullets whizzing past, but sped on as fast as my horse would go, soon reaching the water which my partner had just crossed. He was halting on the other side, awaiting my approach, still choking his prisoner, who was writhing under his sinewy hands and making frantic efforts to escape. Much was I wondering at Ben's extraordinary feat, which to me seemed superhuman, yet the stalwart scout as he sat on his slender pony, twisting his merciless hands around the naked throat of his adversary, uttered not one word, but bore a quiet yet determined smile on his set features.

I approached Ben, and loosening a strap which hung on my saddle, tied the hands of our prisoner behind his back and with Ben's aid bound him on the pack-horse which I had led along.
His face was a study as he lay there helpless before the eyes of his victors, and his eye-balls followed every one of our motions, as we hastily surveyed the scene we left behind, and consulted together on what now to do.

Our enemy had given up the pursuit as it seemed, and now that we felt comparatively safe from an evil intending bullet we set about examining our arms and belongings. I had my carbine and revolvers, and Ben still boasted of his long rifle, which hung loosely around his shoulder.

He was perfectly unconcerned about the whole matter, just as though it had all been child's play and not a desperate race for life. His escape was due to the fact, as I sorrowfully learned, that the redskins had pounced upon poor Cardon, who had been captured, thus leaving Ben free to act for the moment. He of course improved his opportunity and rushed forth from the cave just as I halted in front of it with the horses. He reported the foe's strenght as consisting of about eight men, all of whom must necessarily have entered the cave previous to our occupancy or by another inlet. The fact of the case was that we three men of the prairies, who had supposed ourselves fully conversant with the tricky methods of our natural foes, had deliberately and without a moment's thought of danger entered the wolf trap. Still as it was we congratulated ourselves on our lucky escape, and having decided to pursue our course toward the south, in a direction toward the settlements, as our trapping excursion had come to such an untimely end, we pushed along, our prisoner riding between us.

The absence of Cardon lay heavily upon our mind, still we, accustomed as we were to sudden changes in our conditions, soon dismissed the subject and hurried along as fast as we could go, intending to find our way to the fort, and there to summon help for Cardon's release.

We had not a mouthful to eat, all our stores having fallen into the hands of the foe, and were as a consequence anxious, to say the least. We pursued our way however till about noon, when Ben dismounted near a small slough and shot some small ducks, which we picked and baked at the fire. Our captive did not refuse the bite offered him, and after we had appeased our appetite, the ludicrous situation in which we were just now, burst upon us and caused a merry ring of laughter.

So is man. The danger past, the head extricated from the entangling meshes of the net, and he breathes free again, and leaves care behind.

That night, after having securely fettered our prize, we rested on our arms under the starry canopy of heaven; victims of an adverse fate, we rested nevertheless secure and peacefully, and with the dawn of day were up and on our journey. The air was clear and fresh, and of course invigorating, causing us to store away the few morsels we had left from the day before with avidity. We felt in better spirit too, and Ben kept singing and cheering along on the way. Suddenly, it must have been about noon, just as we were ascending a knoll in the prairie, we perceived a squad of mounted men in the distance, and were again thoroughly alarmed.
