Experiments to Determine Greatest Profit to Farmers Under Way.

RESULTS TO BE PUBLISHED

Horticultural Department Keeps Accounts of Cost of Preserving.

Whether there is greater profit to the farmer to sell his tomatoes and other vegetable products on the market or to can them is the question tnat the department of horticulture of the University of Missouri has been attempting to solve by experiments this summer. M. C. Barnes, a farmer living near Springfield, Mo., has made the assertion that there is more profit in canning vegetables. To prove, or disprove this: ments are being made on the . L. L. ural grounds Beets, tomat asnaragus, beans, and chard vegetable is sembling spa....

About 8,000 cans of vegetables will be in stock when the work is finished. These will probably be sold to Mr. Barnes. The results of the experiments, giving costs and all other data will be published in bulletin form and given to the farmers of Missouri free. All the work being done is done by advanced students of the College of Agriculture of the University of Missouri.

The vegetables are cooked in a steam cooker in a plant on the horticultural grounds. The cans are first filled and all but a pin hole scaled up before they are placed in the cook-of horticulture, and F. E. Miller, al
