

THEY ARE WADING IN OIL

Down by the

Duke-Knowles Annex

While making the location for our No. 1 well our engineers had to wade in oil that overflowed from the Southland well on the adjoining lease.

Extract from Fort Worth Star-Telegram, June 17:

Standing on a street corner in Desdemona, 329 oil rigs can be counted and there are scores of others that cannot be seen. There are a half dozen wells around the town that are responsible for the rush on the town. The Echols, Terrell, Peerless, Hamilton and others of the gusher type that are near the town are the big drawing cards.

A string of derricks stretches from Desdemona to Gorman and the Southland well two miles east of Gorman has started a big development there. This well gets from under control occasionally and floods the country, according to operators who have recently visited the field. Engineers making a new location near the Southland last week reported they waded in oil ankle deep for hours.

No less than fifty wells in the Desdemona-Gorman territory are nearing the sand level and are to be completed within the next two weeks. Already the daily output of this district is between 12,000 and 15,000 barrels daily. Two weeks more is expected to increase this output and possibly double it, making this one of the best districts in West Texas. The one time question mark that was always connected with the Duke pool is about to disappear, operators say, and faith in the district is gradually being strengthened.

Rapid development of the company's holdings and the distribution of profits in early and substantial dividends is the expectation of the management. The management of the company is in the hands of strong and successful oil and business men whose integrity and ability to carry out any proposition they may undertake is unquestioned.
