Army Murses in Big Demand.

The American Red Cross is endeavoring to supply the demand for nurses. An official bulletin posted at conspicuous places at the camp that the attention of young women visitors at the cantonment might be attracted to it reads as follows: "We have been definitely asked by the Surgeon General to supply 5,000 nurses by June 1, for the Army alone, and it is estimated that probably not far from 30,000 additional nurses will be needed by January 1, 1919. It seems evident from the recent surveys which have been made of the nursing resources of the country that there are not more than 65,000 registered nurses in the United States. If we are to meet the needs of the Army and Navy, we shall probably need to assign to duty within the next year not far from 30,000 nurses."

Conserving Clothing and Supplies.

There must be no accumulation of unused goods in regimental and company store houses.

An order has been issued from division headquarters for regimental and other separate organization commanders to designate one or more officers as clothing and equipage inspectors of their respective organizations.

These officers will be required to make weekly inspections of each organization and the company and regimental store rooms.

Here are some of the things these officers must do: See that no clothing is kept on hand in company store rooms; that the stock on hand in regimental storerooms is kept at the lowest possible minimum, and that no accumulation of any article is permitted; that clothing in use by the men is kept repaired, and not worn to such extent as to be beyond repair before being turned in.

Clothing in need of repairs, especially shoes, the order says, should be attended to promptly.

The order has been issued as a means of working all available clothing and equipment to the limit, with the calling out of large numbers of selected men in all parts of the country on a large scale as indicated by Secretary Baker in a recent announcement, every piece of clothing and equipment will be needed. The possibility that supplies might pile up in the storehouses unawares will be obviated.
