Miller Johnson of the A. E. Stevens in France, writes his parents that the boys of the 141st Machine Gun Battalion, expect to be home for New Year's Day. The letter dated Thursday giving day said they were all packed up only awaiting orders to move to the port to board the ship for the U. S. A. The boys were camped at a small village five miles from Langres, France, near the Lorraine front.

We have a letter from Fred Grover, who is still in France, telling of the changes since the end of the war. He says the French are beginning to bring out a few of their little automobiles now that they can buy a little gas and the meat markets are beginning to open, which had long been closed. He says the Americans are given full credit for saving the day and are welcomed everywhere. He mentioned the returning French who had been in German prison camps and said they were a sad lot with haggard faces and long hair. He has no idea when he will return.

Much cotton is still ungathered in Little River county fields on account of a large crop or scarcity of labor, or flu, or all three.

Old man flu has greatly diminished his efforts in this section. There are probably some cases in the country yet, but their number grows less and may they continue to diminish.

Christmas will not be the Christmas that it ought to be if you fail to get your name on the Red Cross Christmas Roll Call. Your last chance is right now.
