A COERCIVE MEASURE.

The park commission has the city council by the heels, so to speak, or at Reast it thinks it has, and proposes to hold its grip until the council comes down with the bonds which were authorized to be issued by the act creating the commission. That was evidently the meaning of the commission's action yesterday in respect to the Minnehaha park. The decision to postpone action was equivalent to saying that we know the people of St. Paul and Minneapolis are anxious to have the park, and it is important to secure the location of the Soldiers' home, but we will use these as levers to force the council into issuing the bonds. The GLOBE is not disposed to criticize the commission harshly, but it does think that it strained a point that was not justified under the circumstances. It would have been better to have said in distinct terms that the commission was in favor of establishing the park, and would proceed to do so immediately upon receiv ing assurance from the council that the funds would be provided to pay the expense. However, the action has been taken and the responsibility rests with the council. It may be that the city fathers will naturally be inclined to re sent the attempt at coercion, but under all the circumstances it is better for the aldermen to suppress any personal feeling they may have in the matter and deal with the question in a thoroughly business like way. There is no time to be lost and prompt action is imperative.

THE TEMPERANCE WAR. The temperance text book war has broken out again with renewed fury. This time it is Mrs. HUNT who takes a whack at the text book commission and she proves herself a veritable Amazon It is evident from the tone of Mrs HUNT's newspaper assault on the commission that the temperance women do not propose to play second fiddle to the temperance politicians. The women have struck out on a straight line for to tal abstinence and they evidently intend to stick to the original text. At least there is no indication of a surrender at at this stage of the battle. The GLOBE dees not propose to take any part in the controversy, nor does it intend to enter into a discussion of its merits. But it is a singular piece of history in this connection that but a short time ago there was an apparent unanimity of sentiment among the school authorities and Republican newspapers that a series of text books should be adopted which taught total abstinence. Suddenly there was a right-about movement, and the series which had formerly been recommended was rejected. The dickneybirds say that this change was the result of a conference between a number of leading Republicans. Whether it was thought that the espousal of the total abstinence doctrine was dangerous to the Republican party, or whether the politicians resented the idea of being coerced into measures, does not appear on the surface. But, whatever the cause, the change of front was made, and now the sure-enough temperance people propose to show the politicians that they are not to be trifled with. The school board of Minneapolis has already rejected the series of books recommended by the commission, and have adopted the rejected Pathfinder series. This was done on the advice of the attorney general, who decided that the commission's power was only advisory, and its action not obligatory upon the local boards. The result will be that the temperance school text book fight is to be carried into every school district in the state. The members of the W. C. T. U. have the war paint on, and under the leadership of Gen. Hunt propose to make it hot for the milk and cider temperance folks.

ONLY BEGINNING. We trust the hundreds of bright graduates who have within the past few days closed the doors of Minnesota schools and colleges behind them forever will not make the natural mistake of fancying their education complete. or, in other words, will not think they "know it all." As a matter of fact, the principal thing one learns at school or college is how little he does or ever can know. The chances are that the person who appreciates most forcibly the limits of his knowledge is the one whose stock of learning is most extensive. Generally speaking, the actual learning acquired even at a high grade college is comparatively insignificant, nor is it the chief benefit to be derived from a college course. The main advantage lies in the discipline given the mind, and in directing it in the proper | only vindicated after thirty-one deaths |

THE DAILY GLOBE channels, so that the individual will know how and what to study all the know how and what to study all the rest of his life. During the period spent at school and college the foundation alone is laid. It must depend upon the graduate as to what kind of a structure, if any, will be erected upon that foundation. So our young friends who have so successfully pleted the initiatory period of study and who now face the serious business of life with such eager expectant faces, must not make the mistake of supposing there is no more study for them. will find that in order to achieve success in whatever calling they may choose, study of the most constant kind will be required, and as they grow older they will appreciate with the acquirement o each fresh fund of knowledge that the proportion borne by what it is possible for one person to know to the entire amount of existing learning is discouragingly small. Still there is a good deal of reason for the self-complacency of the graduates, for though they may not know more than their elders, their information, in certain directions, is certainly fresher.

IS THE GLOBE GROWING?

This is a question in which the public is interested, because the GLOBE is a public institution and is supported by public patronage. The success of the paper, therefore, is a matter of which the public has a legitimate right to know something. If one wants an answer to the question, Is the GLOBE growing? one has only to look at the figures presented herewith, which can be verified in every instance. Every assertion made is easily susceptible of absolute proof.

The increase in the advertising patronage of the GLOBE is the largest on record in any city in the United States. Just think of it. During the month of May, 1885, the GLOBE printed only 712 columns of advertising; during May, 1887, there were printed 1,486 columns, an increase of 774 columns (or more than double the number) in two years. There is no newspaper in any city, east or west, that can make such a showing as this.

The masses of the people have also learned to recognize the value of the GLOBE as an advertising medium. Their patronage comes in the form of small advertisements, or "wants," and the amount of each order is quite small. but in the aggregate the sum is swelled to large proportions. This feature of the Globe's business is regarded as extremely valuable, and it is gratified at the steady growth of the "wants" department. As in the case of the display advertising, the increase in the 'wants" has been remarkable. During may, 1885, 12,340 "wants" were printed in the GLOBE; in May, 1887, there were 21,675, an increase of 9,335.

This marvelous increase of advertising patronage has been due to the rapid and unparalleled growth of the GLOBE's circulation, which is now conceded to be the largest of any paper between Chicago and the Pacific coast. The popularity of the GLOBE, as a channel through which the masses of the people may communicate with each other, by means of the "want" ads, has become so general and pronounced that is utilized as almost the exclusive medium. This is proven by the figures printed

The progress and growth of the Sun-DAY GLOBE are also surprising, as they are almost unprecedented. The increased sales and general growth in circulation have been marvelons. Look about you any Sunday morning and see how it is. See the people in the street | for command; above all, what constancy cars reading the GLOBE; observe the same thing on the suburban trains, or as you stroll along the streets and pass of the Confederate veterans, Gov. Ames pedestrians, or people sitting on the porches of their residences; interview the news agents, ask the train boys, or the street urchins, and find out how far the GLOBE leads.

The press throughout the entire country-from Boston to San Francisco, and from Winnipeg to New Orleans-have re-echoed the sentiment of the people in the Northwest in pronouncing the GLOBE the brightest, most popular and widely-read journal in all this vast section of country tributary to St. Paul.

The GLOBE building is also a striking evidence of the success of the paper. The fame of the finest newspaper palace in America has become world-wide, and in every leading city in the United States can be seen pictures of the GLOBE building adorning hotels and other prominent public places. Verily, there are evidences on every hand of find that the men of Virginia will rethe progress and grand future of the GLOBE.

THE MAN AND THE COAT.

We observe that several of our Eastern contemporaries are very much wrought up over the tremendous question as to whether a dress coat should be worn or not, and, if so, by whom, and at what times. It appears to us that in the contention which has been raging among them on the subject, they have neglected to look beneath the surface, and have treated the question in a manner entirely too superficial.

The man who intends to make one of the members of society, in the restricted sense of the word, must necessarily obey the unwritten law of the assemblage in which he seeks to move, and attire himself on proper occasions in the uniform presented by its members, just as much as a soldier must wear the uniform of his regiment. It this fact lies the dress coat's strongest argument. But we submit that our disputatious contemporaries are losing ;ight of the man in their strife over his coat. In our humble opinion, the kind of man whom the coat covers is far more material. The dress coat may attire fashionably the veriest fop and nincompoop, while the flannel shirt may cover the broad shoulders of a real man, one whose breast is heaving with honest and earnest aspirations. whose heart beats with kindly inpulses, and whose hands are hard with honorable toil. This one, though he never saw a dress coat, save on the back of a waiter, is of more value to society, in its unrestricted sense, than half a dozen of his shallow-pated, but fashionably dressed brethren. Not but that there are as brave and energetic young fellows as ever lived who delight to attire themselves in broadcloth and fine lines, but the odds are in favor of the sturdy youth who knows not the meaning of finery, masculine or feminine.

ALL Kentucky is rejoicing over "the vindication of the law" in the killing of CRAIG TOLLIVER and his ten followers, but it would seem that a law that is

STRAY SUNBEAMS.

While the politicians are working vigprously to stir up sectional discord and to keep the Northern and Southern sections as far apart as possible, it is gratifying to observe the great body of the people, both North and South, are just as vigorously cementing the bonds of union and are bringing about the most enduring fraternal relations between the two sections. It is a good thing for the country that the people are thus disposed to squelch the traitorous designs of the ambitious politicians.

A cheering evidence of the popular disposition to bring the sections into fraternal relations was found in the reception given to the R. E. Lee camp of Confederate veterans by the Andrews post of Union veterans in Boston last week. They met on historic ground, which vividly recalled the days when the people of the Old Bay state and the people of the Old Dominion stood shoulder to shoulder in the struggle for the establishment of American independence. As the veterans of the two sections sat together at the banquet board in Faneuil hall they forgot the late family disturbances in the remembrance of the glorious achievements of the past.

The sentiments expressed there were in pleasing contrast to the silly vaporings of the politicians of the FAIR-CHILD-FORAKER type. The occasion was one to tone down the usually fiery Senator Hoag, who, in one of the most patriotic speeches that he ever delivered. said: "We, too, have learned to know as we never knew before the quality of the noble Southern stock; what courage in war; what attachment to home and state; what capacity for great affection and generous emotion; what aptness -that virtue beyond all virtues, with out which no people can long be great or free." In an address of welcome to ne by, I trust never to return, when Massachusetts and Virginia will fail to appreciate and understand each other. In ture that unrolls before the republic the people of the Bay State and the people of the Old Dominion have to work out a common destiny."

Speaking for the other side, ex-Congressman John Goode said: "I know whereof I affirm when I say that not a single man among the Virginians would re-establish the institution of slavery if he could. There is not a man among them who harbors in his breast on particle of animosity or resentment toward this proud American Union or its brave defenders. We are ready to grasp hands with the men of Massachusetts in starting our country upon a new career of prosperity. If the government ever becomes involved in trouble with any foreign power you will spond with alacrity."

OUR DAILY BREAD.

"Give us this day—"
Life brought her nothing men call good—
None of its brightest or its best—
But sorrow broke her soli-inde.
And anguish sought her patient breast,
Yet, through it all, her faith was strong.
And strongest when most dark her lot;
She knew that peace was hers ere long,
Where sorrow dies and tears are not,
So with clasped hands and bended head,
Her lips could say,
"Give us this day
Our daily bread."

She climbed the weary hill of life,
With feet unaided and uushod
(Save by God's grace), and constant strife
Attended every step she trod.
Yet, through the gloom these shadows made,
A light about her feet was cast,
And lifting up her voice she laid
Her load, where loads must come at last,
Hence, those poor lips so scantly fed
In faith could say,
"Give us this day
Our daily bread."

A Splendid Country That is Worth

Millions of Dollars. Midway between the Twin Cities is a beautiful expanse of table land which commands a splendid view of the surrounding country, and capitalists have been quick to appreciate the natural advantages thus given for laying the oundation of a future suburban residence portion of the metropolis of the Northwest. Summit View, Macalester, Merriam's first, second and third addi-tions, Lovering, Rosedale, Quinby, Col-lege, Oakland and Union Parks are some lege, Oakland and Union Parks are some of the names applied to the subdivisions of the territory embraced between the Tair grounds on the north and the river on the south and west, the principal owners and holders of which are Bishop Ireland and Messrs. W. R. Merriam, Dennis Ryan, William Dawson, Bernard Kuhl and F. A. Rullman Acres in this favored locality readily command $5,000 each, while building sites 40x150 feet are held from $1,000 upwards, and few of them are on the market. wards, and few of them are on the market at those figures. All the land is well situated, and but little grading is necessary, in fact, the only work that can be done by artificial means is the level-ing of the roadway, and an army of men and teams are now engaged in doing this, and with the most gratifying ong this, and with the most gratifying results. Particularly is this true along Snelling avenue, which is rapidly nearing completion to the railroad depot, and will be the principal thoroughfare of the Midway properties. Residences of the wealthier classes of the community break the monotony of the prairie of a few years ago, and everywhere as far as the eye can reach are evidences of as the eye can reach are evidences of thrift and prosperity. No cheap houses are being constructed, the lowest of the wooden improvements costing not less than $3,000, while some of the more substantial and luxurious type have involved an outlay of fully $7,000 to $10,000. At Macalester an addition to the new Presbyterian college is rapidly new Presbyterian college is rapidly nearing completion, which will double the size of the present building, and the foundations are already excavated for another public school structure in this SUBURBAN ADJUNCT to the Twin Cities. Then, too, the Summit avenue boulevard 250 feet wide will be an additional feature and fur-nish a drive unequaled for beauty of scenery and will be an additional feature and furnish a drive unequaled for beauty of scenery and easy grades down to the bluffs that line the river edge. Railfoad depots are already built at Snelling alvenue and Merriam Park and the time tables are conveniently arranged for the transportation of residents at both-places and the adjacent country. Hamline, one of the most enterprising and growing of the suburban resorts near St. Paul, is already putting on city airs, and on every side new buildings are springing up as if by magic and nestling under the protecting wings of the Northern Pacific railroad shops, which are located at that point. Those who have availed themselves of the opportunity to settle in the favored region never tire of sounding its advantages in climate and situation, and cool weather seems to be a predomidating feature. From the highest point, say the knoll leading off from Summit park via Snelling avenue, the observer can readily discern the spires of St. Paul and Minneapolls churches tending heavenward, while the tall chimneys of factories and mills of the two busy towns give promise of increased wealth and business in the near future. But of the panoramo presented from the same point of observation how can one fittingly deramo presented from the same point of observation how can one fittingly de-plet its glories! Far away to the south presses the Father of Waters to his gulfy outlet, the river appearings in the picture like a stream of molten gold, while at the north and west hills with verdure clad give the scene an aspect of an eternal emerald carpet of which the eye never tires.

The Hospes Golden Wedding.

Society at Lake Elmo received a brilliant inauguration last Friday afternoon and evening in the magnificent reception given by Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hospes, of Stillwater, who entertained their immediate family with a banquet in honor of their golden wedding at the Park hotel under the management of A. J. Keegan and W. H. Hurd, caterer. At 4 o'clock the guests from Stillwater and St. Paul had arrived. After a general hand shaking and congratulations to the beloved couple, who half a century ago stood before the hymenal altar and promised to share each other's joys and sorrows, until death do part, the happy couple, with their honorable white hair and evening in the magnificent receppromised to share each other's joys and sorrows, until death do part, the happy couple, with their honorable white hair and loving faces, whose ages, seventy-three and seventy-six, presented a picture for an artist as they repaired to the banquet, followed by sons, daughters and grandchildren, who ate and drank to the health and prosperity of their parents and grandparents. The tables were spread in the spacious dinjury room parents and grandparents. The tables were spread in the spacious dining room of the hotel, in form of a capital "H," and the decorations were magnificent, consisting of hanging smilax, banks of roses and white lillies, and several floral designs placed upon the table, contribu-tions as tokens of love from the guests. When St. Paul Was Young.

Among the visitors at the convention of the master mechanics and master car builders there were some who had been builders there were some who had been in St. Paul before, but none whose first visit dated so far back as that of C. M. Reed, of Corning, N. Y., who, in company with Hon. Joseph Haskell, first came to St. Paul (then only a small settlement of about a dozen houses) in 1844. After a stay of about two years, Mr. Reed left the Northwest for Texas, and since that time has not visited St. Paul until during the past week. Meeting one or two of the old settlers and friends of forty-three years ago, it is needless to state that his stay in the city has been an enjoyable one. Mr. Reed is now over sixty years of age, but still has the life and spirit of a man of thirty, with not a sixty years of age, but still has the life and spirit of a man of thirty, with not a wrinkle on his face to mark the trail of time. A trip to the Globe tower was one of the many pleasant incidents of the past week, and as he gazed about upon the wide expanse of built-up territory, he searched in vain for old landmarks of 1844. Mr. Reed goes back to his Eastern home with many happy remembrances of St. Paul and the royal manner in which he has been treated by all with whom he has come in contact. Arm and arm with the son of his old-time friend he has fought again in fancy the scrimmages of early border life. With a sigh for the departed and a word of cheer for the survivors, he leaves for of cheer for the survivors, he leaves for home with a kindly impression of the metropolis of the Northwest.

Keep It Going. Mankato Register. Why don't our St. Paul contemporaries start that periodical sensation about the crumbling capitol once more? It is time the state house took another tumble, and now is an opportune time, when there are no Solons within to mutilate. Keep it going, brethren, for next summer there will be many running to and fro informing the "dear people" of their anxiety to go down and be martyred in the ruins the following winter.

HE LOST THE OARS. On a calm, still evening of last week

On a calm, still evening of last week, as the shades of night were fast enveloping the earth in darkness and the many colored lanterns on the Leip pavilion shown in the distance like the lights of a St. Louis summer garden, a cedar boat might have been seen making its way slowly through the water. The young man rowing the boat wore a blonde mystache and clothes of a city. blonde mustache and clothes of a city cut, and looked like one more familiar with dodging teams on a crowded thor-oughfare than rowing a boat. The other occupant of the boat was a young lady, and, as she sat in the stern idly dangling a pond lily in the water, semed more intent in listening to the words of her companion than in admir-ing the beauties of the scenery. His words of her companion than in admiring the beauties of the scenery. His conversation was growing quite interesting, and he remarked that he hoped their journey through life might be as smooth and free from jars as the motion of the boat, when, in the sailor's vernacular, he caught a "crab," and as he vainly endeavored to catch the unshipped oar, it disappeared in the gloaming. In the confusion that ensued the other oar slipped through the oar lock and went to join its mate. He paddled around with his hands in search of the missing oars, but all efforts to recover them proud unavailing. He glanced at the nearest shore and calculated that with his only means of propelling the boat and the present condition of the wind, he might reach terra firma by the 4th of July—if he had good luck. He began to grow anxious; he had asked the young lady out from the city for a few hours' quiet row, and not to spend the season. The lo o'clock train would leave at 10 as usual, the same as though nothing had happened; and as he, in fancy, saw the young ladies' stern parent anxiously consulting his timepiece fancy, saw the young ladies' stern parent anxiously consulting his timeplece and wondering what had become of his daughter, great drops of perspiration bespangled his brow. But fate was kind, and after drifting around on the

I met the other day Miss Dorothy Dene, who has been painted into a celebrity by Sir Frederick Leighton, and photographed by every pho-tographer in England, and was pleased and gratified to find that, unlike most professional beauties, she is a very clever and sensible girl. She told me she had a number of offers to go to America, but she did not intend accepting any of them until after she had fixed herself still more firmly on her pedestal in England and added ex-perience to that she had already gained. She is under the impression that New York is more critical even than London, and she does not propose to risk making a failure on one side of the water.

As hurriedly along the crowded street I pushed my way, a woman's awful face Confronted me-and darkened all the place Wherein we walked; then faithful memory

Escaped from its dark prison and distraught;
And now it glides among the eager throngs
To eluteh their souls with terror and restrain
Their feet from luring ways that lead to pain,
