THE MIDGET IS MISSING. Mrs. Abigail Thompson's Daughter

Abducted, It Is Supposed, by a

Mrs. Abigail Thompson, a widow residing at No. 240 East Fillmore avenue, complained to the police at the Ducas street station yesterday that her thirteen-year-old daughter, Maggie, who is a midget but two feet six inches in height, had mysteriously disappeared. It is believed the chiid was abducted by Albert Beadle, a young man who had until recently been employed by Mrs. Thompson as a driver. Mrs. Thompson formerly operated a large farm in Egan township, Dak., and removed to St. Paul in March last. She is well-to-do, and desired to give her children an education. The midget child who has disappeared has been attending the Lafayette school, and was considered a bright scholar. Beadle was employed by Mrs. Thompson in Dakota, and removed here with the family to take care of their carriage teen-year-old daughter, Maggie, who is Beadle was employed by Mis. Indipson in Dakota, and removed here with the family to take care of their carriage horses. He seemed to be an honest and industrious servant, and had the entire confidence of Mrs. Thompson until within the last month, when he took to drinking considerably. He had been heard frequently to say that if Maggie Thompson would consent to go on exhibition in museums she might earn fame and a big salary. These stories came to the ears of the girl's mother, and on Wednesday evening she discharged Beadle from her service. Little Maggie cried when told Beadle was discharged, and about 9 o'clock she took her hat and went into the parlor of the family residence. A short time after her mother entered the parlor and discovered that the child had gone. She has not been seen since.

There is every reason for the belief that Beadle is responsible for Maggie's disappearance. When he first entered disappearance. When he first entered the service of the family he could not read or write, and this so excited Maggie's sympathies that she took upon herself the task of teaching him. They were together a great deal, and were very much attached to each other. The thorax is that Readle has induced the theory is that Beadle has induced the midget to leave home with the intention midget to leave home with the intention of placing her on exhibition. He is about five feet eight inches in height, with a light complexion and mustache and rather good-looking. Maggie Thompson has a face which gives her an appearance of being at least twenty years of age, and her manner is very grave. When she left home she wore a cardinal red dress, grey cloak and black hat.

ITS FIRST VICTIM.

Emma Happe, a Young German

Girl, Dies of Smallpox. Emma Happe, aged twelve years, died No. 557 Stryker avenue, at 5 o'clock vesterday afternoon. The remains were buried privately last night by the undertaking firm of McCarthy & Donnelly. City Physician Ancker attended the girl during her illness, and the house was strictly quarantined to prevent a possible spreading of the dread scourge. It is not known where the contagion originated, but Dr. Ancker is of the opinion that it was brought over by a relative of the girl who recently arrived from Germany. The health depart-ment were notified of the case a week ago, and every precaution has been ob-

ARBOR DAY.

Young Ideas Did the Bulk of the Tree Planting Yesterday.

Yesterday was the date appointed by Gov. McGill for the observance of Arbor day throughout the state, a custom that has been in vogue for a number of years all over the Union. The people understand that each one is requested understand that each one is requested to plant a tree where it will do the most good, but it is safe to say that less than one-third of the population of the state responded to the request. Saturday was purposely selected in order that all school children would have an opportunity to perpetuate the custom by tree planting. It would not be going too far to say that they did the bulk of the planting in the city. Outside, in the rural districts, the farmer probably observed the day more strictly than his city brethren, not so much because it was Arbor day as from the fact that growing needs and scarcity of timber demand it. Timber does not grow with the same rapidity that characterizes its disappearance, and the only way to prevent complete barrenness is a full observance of Arbor day and many other days. In many places extrordinary inducements are offered the people for planting trees, and land where trees are planted is freed from the burden of taxation. In some states the custom comes on a school day, and the schools domuch good. It is made a duty, and under the guidance and direction of teachers scholars are each obliged to plant a tree in some locality. Whole blocks and lots of them have thus been beautified and shaded from the sun's hot rays. Minnesota laws in no way recognize the day. It is observed in this state to plant a tree where it will do the most find fols of them have that well observed in this state through proclamations by the governor, the first one being issued by Gov. Hubbard a few years ago. Gov. MeGill, recognizing the wisdom of his predecessor, also kept up the proclamation act, and figures in the state records show that great good has resulted. Every one knows that a forest that could be leveled in a single day can only be replaced by growth in many years, and every sane person can certainly imagine the disastrous consequences that would follow the depletion of the timber resources of the continent. Wherever one tree is cut down another should be planted. Every one who can Wherever one tree is cut down another should be planted. Every one who can, and there are few who cannot, should plant a tree somewhere every week of this life. If the cutting of timber continues at the rate it is now going on, the future generations must either sleep in and eat from the "antique," or build their beds and tables of stone. Some states offer a bounty for every tree planted, but the absence of said bounty should not in any way prevent the culture and planting of trees that is needed everywhere. Thus far the results have been good in Minnesota, and the instructions of Supts Kiehle to the schools throughout the state were followed by teachers and scholars, and cannot fail to result in abundant good.

GOOD TIME FOR ARKS.

All Indications Point to a Second Flood.

There are splendid prospects for a second flood. The people in threatened districts know it, too. In West St. Paul and along the river banks the residents are very uneasy, and make no attempt to conceal the state of their feelings. The rain, which has continued steadily for over forty-eight hours, has driven the frost from the ground, loosened the earth and caused serious washouts in many localities, to say nothing of great inconvenience and discomfort to pedestrians and travel. discorrifort to pedestrians and travel. were well repaid for having braved the Already the lower portions of the city element to make an imaginary town of are partially submerged, and the quantity of water is simply enormous. The gutters and sewers failed woefully in their purposes, and streets and sidewalks on all sides have been veritable creeks. Land slides have been common. Two occurred in West St. Paul, one on Dakota avenue and the other between Yoerg and Bruggeman's breweries, almost demolishing a large barn. Early last evening a third one occurred near Robert street, on the Milwaukee track. Trains on that road were delayed considerably. The tracks at the Chestnut street station were entirely submerged. In addition to the water, large quantities of mud and debris were lodged there, having been washed from the streets above. West St. Paul, from the Globe, building resembles the "thousand islands," and the distress is almost as great as it was a week ago. In Swede hollow, and other similar depressions, a great deal of suffering is experienced, and the sudden change to cold weather does not serve to better things. The varies at the union depot cold weather does not serve to better things. The yards at the union depot are afloat, and around the wholesale houses, mud—good, soft mud—is everywhere. Bad washouts have occurred on George, State and Isabel street. Over on Concord street everything is yellow. The waster washed away large quantities of concord street everything is yellow. The water washed away large quantities of earth from the high embankments and all around, land slides large and small have occurred. Above the city the water has had an opportunity to run into the river and the serious apprehensions of high water appear, from all indications the well-founded. Beginning the serious apprehensions of high water appear, from all indications the well-founded. Beginning indications, to be well founded. Residents in exposed places are making preparations to meet trouble. Lower rooms are being cleared of household goods and outside property removed to higher ground.

ANOTHER DEADLY PARALLEL

He has not behind him, as Napoleon the Small had, the tradition of an immortal name to give him anotte, Arcola, Rivoli, dictitious value in the eyes of an imaginative and essentially warlike nation, like the Freuch. RUSTLER IS A CORPSE.

Dillon's Famous Steed

Breathes His Last. Jim Dillon's horse is dead. This announcement will bring sorrow and joy into every household in St. Paul and the suburban towns-sorrow, because he didn't die sooner; joy, that he didn't die later. Yes, the death of this noble beast will come to the people in the nature of a shock, and men will turn for and instant from the pursuit of pleasure and pelf and remark with a sigh: Alas, poor "Rustler." He was a great animal, and none knew him but to sympathize with him. For years he buffeted the rain and wind and hail of Minnesota weather, and during all this time never has he been known to neigh a disapproval or kick because of the weight of his blankets.

Out of respect to the lamented beast,

his blankets.
Out of respect to the lamented beast, and as a slight token of the feelings that pervade the city hall and its inhabitants, Mayor Smith has ordered that the old building be draped in bunting for a period of one year, and that Joe Spiel wear a banana peel on his hat while on duty. The death of Mr. Dillon's horse is regarded by many as a had duty. The death of Mr. Dillon's horse is regarded by many as a bad omen for Honest John Roche, who has always been a winner while the steed was on deck. He was a shrewd old beast, and it is said he knew every house along the route from his domicile on Commercial street to the stopping off place in front of the comptroller's office, and while other foolish animals were tearing their hooflets off in the slotlet, Jim's horse made a note of it and merely winked at the crevice as he passed it by.

The Father Mathew society has not received official notice of the sad event, but it is expected that suitable action in the matter will be taken this afternoon. The funeral will be held some time to-day. In the language of the poet:

Lift him up tenderly, Lift him with care; Fashioned so slenderly, Bones almost bare.

Smooth his dark mane away, Comb down his tail; Through his smooth ears, Let the wind blow a gale.

Off to the Odorless, Cart him right through; Render to ham fat, The things that are glue.
