Irish-American societies of St. Paul,
Minneapolis and Stillwater gave a picnic at White Bear Beach Thursday.
Originally the intention was to have the picnic at Mahtomedi, but the assembly directors would not permit a dancing pavilion to be erected on the grounds.
The weather was all that could be asked for, and large crowds from the cities were in attendance and participated in the various outdoor sports, enjoyed a whirl on the dancing pavilion, or listened to the speech-making. Thursday evening the Chateaugay grounds were brightened with the soft glow of many lanterns, and inside the hotel the guests enjoyed themselves dancing. The enjoyed themselves dancing. The Richards brothers, with guitar and banjo, furnished music.

Alfred Klotts and Miss Margaret Rugg gave a progressive euchre party and candy pull Wednesday evening at the Burns' cottage, on Lake avenue. Children from the Williams house and surroughing of target ware present and surrounding cottages were present and participated in the merry-making. Those who won prizes were Mr. Good-hue and Miss Sadie O'Brien, head prize; Dick O'Brien and Miss Florence Lamphey, progressive prize; Sam Glass and Sadie Glass, booby prize; Alfred Klotts captured the most candy.

Misses Carroll, Keough, Daly, Turner, Hope, Heiberg, Hart, Boeckler, Ponderford, Grace, Dreyer, Trowbridge, Lytle, Campbell, Foley, Rogers, Talmadge, Mrs. Hattie Clark, Mrs. Marvin, madge, Mrs. Hattie Clark, Mrs. Marvin, Mrs. McClintock, Messrs. Mahtomedi hotel closed Wednesday for the season of 1888. The hotel has been run this summer by Mr. Sherin, jointly with the Chautauqua assembly, and the season has been a fairly remunerative one. The few remaining guests at the house have taken quarters at the various hotels across the lake, most of which expect to remain open until the middle of September.

IN THE HAMMOCK. Out in the hammock, under the trees, Kissed by the fragrant, amorous breeze, Swinging so low, swinging so slow, Forgetful of life and its mysteries, I lie in the arms of indolent ease. What think I of the world of care? The skies above are cloudlessly fair, Rocking so light, rocking so slight, Content to dream in the sun-drowse I swing till I sleep ere Γm aware.

Over my head the whispering leaves, Down thro' their network the sunlight cleaves, Swaying so soft, swaying so oft,
The beautiful summer my soul reprieves,
No turbulent tumult my quietude grieves.

To Wrangle With a Flirt, Whether She Is Wise or Foolish.

Some Men Born Flirts, Others Have Flirts Thrust Upon Them.

Baltimore American.

What could be more timely this midsummer's day than a little talk about flirts, for the summer is presumably their harvest and the popular resorts their vantage grounds, Indeed, many of the dowagers would be overcome with ennui long before the season was over, had they not an affaire de cœur in the form of a flirtation to watch through its various stages.

Of course, we are all taught by precept before we are launched upon the gay and fickle world, that a flirt is a sort of human monster, who goes about seeking whom he may devour; but, alas, precepts are quickly forgot, and experience teaches us that he is invariably the most charming man we meet at vanity fair. He does not impress us as dangerous as he smiles into our eyes, but then we have not learned how much a smile sometimes conceals, for he may smile and smile, and be a villain. But because a man is thoroughly attractive, even fascinating-hence a flirt, in the usual acceptance of the word-he is not

THEY FLIRT. So many persons err in believing a man to blame if he makes a deeper im-pression upon the woman he meets than he can reciprocate.

Some men are born flirts. Without intending or wishing it, they win the admiration—aye, the devotion—of almost every one they meet. These to the peace of mind of their fair friends, but not as much so as the one who having the natural gift has also a friends, but not as much so as the one who, having the natural gift, has also a keen appreciation of its power and enjoyment of its results. We have all met him; we have watched him with interest; we have seen the other men watch him with envy. For men who are not successful with women always despise the one who is.

successful with women always despise the one who is.

The male firt does not win the regard of women by flattery. He seldom makes the mistake of pointedly complimenting. In that fact lies his strongest card. The men who deal in tiresome flattery soon pall. The firt looks more than he says. It is his indescriaable manner that gains the day. Each woman with whom he talks is made to feel that to him she is the only woman in the world. If he been called to Fort Howard, Wis., by the illness of her brother.

Mrs. E. B. Higgins is visiting her sure to remember her, and although he has really forgot all about it, and may be racking his brain to remember the time and place, or perhaps her name, "outwardly his manner will be as though silently, of course, but none the less deeply, he has dwelt upon her image ever since."

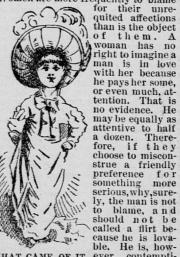

It is the "impalpable manner" that constitutes the chief charm of the flirt, and it is this intangible, subtle flattery that is dear to the heart of woman, and so irritating to men who have not so irritating to men who have not learned it. These men flirts are not the handsomest men in an assemblage, neither do they appear to exert themselves popular favor—it is their seeming indif-ference to admiration which makes them so attractive. A good example of a male flirt in recent fiction is Heathcote. male flirt in recent fiction is Heathcote, in Miss Woolson's story of "Anne." I will quote a paragraph which describes him and analyses his influence upon his acquaintances of both sexes. "What was it they found to like in him? This was the question asked often in irritation by his brother man, and, naturally, for the women themselves could not give a reasonable reason. The corresponding idea of life is not the same since men admire with a reason—the woman is plainly beautiful, or brilliant, or fascinating around whom they gather. At Caryl's seven of they gather. At Caryl's seven of eight men were handsomer than Heathcote, a number were more brilliant, many were richer, yet almost all of these had discovered at one time or another that the eyes they were talking to were following Heathcote furtively, and they had seen attempts that mede them. they had seen attempts that made them tingle with anger, all the more so because they were so infinitesimally delicate and fine as became the actions of well-bred women." This is true to life.

Women are more frequently to blonge Women are more frequently to blame for their unre man is in love with her because he pays her some, or even much, attention. That is no evidence. He may be equally as attentive to half a dozen. There-fore, if they choose to misconstrue a friendly preference for something more serious, why, sure ly, the man is not to blame, and should not be called a flirt be-cause he is lova-ble. He is, how-ever, contempti-

WHAT CAME OF IT. ever, contempti-ble when he wins the regard of a woman without caring for her in the least; but I believe there are few such. In my own opinion there are more intentional fiirts among my own sex.

Women love admiration, and they are determined to have it, if they can, and, moreover, they want the world to know they have it; hence this vanity causes them to encourage every would-be ad-them to encourage every would-be admirer they meet.

I heard a sweet, attractive debutante one say she would rather be considered a flirt than anything in the world. She was gifted with the requirements of mind and person. These, added to the desire, made her in one season realize her ambition. Men called her heartless, vain, a flirt incapable of loving, and yet they hovered around her as moths around a candle. She found that herswas not the loftiest ambition, for when her Prince Charming arrived he heard of her reputation and forsook the field, and lost the prize. Men condemn flirts and yet they encourage them. They warn others of their danger, and yet plunge headlong into it themselves.

But, after all, there is not as much harm done by flirts of either sex as the world generally believes. Of course, there is an occasional susceptible heart broken, but this is because one or the other took too much for granted. Reother took too much for granted. Remember this, you who are enjoying your summer outing, make all the friends you can, but don't imagine every friend a lover, and you will be apt to take a less cynical view of life later on.

CAUGHT IN A CLOSET. Where a Belated Sweetheart Was Sniffed Out by a Dog.

Brooklyn Eagle.

Charles Hughes, a young printer, who lives at No. 42 High street, found out last night by personal experience the truth of the old adage that "the course of true love never runs smooth." For a year past he has been paying his addresses to Margaret Caulfield, who is employed at present as a domestic in the family of Col. William C. Booth, at No. 253 Carlton avenue. Last night was Charies' night for calling, and in spite of the rain he was on hand at the usual time. He would have gone away at 11 o'clock, but on account of the storm, which was then at its worst, he pleaded that he might be allowed to stay a little while longer. Margaret demurred, but being coaxed her firmness gave way and she consented to prelong the session. Knowing that it was Mr. Booth's custom to go through the house before retiring, she hid her sweetheart in a closet in the kitchen and went up stairs, intending to return and let him out when her employer should have gone to bed. Mr. Booth started on his rounds about 11:30, accompanied by his setter dog, which is credited with having a remarkably keen nose. As soon as the kitchen was reached the dog began to sniff around and bark, and finally came to a dead sat in front of the began to sniff around and bark, and finally came to a dead set in front of the closet, which contained, beside a choice variety of utensils, the hapless printer. Mr. Booth, who is nothing if not prompt of action, drew his revolver, cocked it, and quickly pulled open the closet door. Hughes, squeezed into a corner, was revealed at once. "Throw up your hands," said the colonel, covering the young man with his weapon, and up young man with his weapon, and up went the hands.

"Now come out and give an account of yourself," continued Mr. Booth, and the printer, without waiting for a second invitation, stepped from his place of concealment and stood sheepishly before his captor, still holding up his hands. He explained, as well as he was able, how it was that he had fallen into such a predicament, but Mr. Booth refused to believe his story, and, taking him by the cellar, led him out into the street and turned him over to Officer Wood, who happened to be passing. The prisoner was marched to Myrtle avenue station, where, after giving his pedigree, he repeated the story he had told to Mr. Booth. The sergeant in charge was disposed to believe him, as he had a respectable appearance, and decided to send for Margaret to see if she would corroborate his statement. She reached the station house in a few minutes and tearfully acknowledged that all her Charles had said was true minutes and tearfully acknowledged that all her Charles had said was true. This satisfied the colonel and Mr. Hughes was allowed to go home, after being warned against putting his trust in closets in future.

Spendthrifts at the Beach.

There are half a dozen young men in Atlantic City who are spending money as freely as water. Their lives will probably point a moral before the ides of another summer. There are many Philadelphians who recall the sunny ways of Jimmy Henderson, who lived so lavishly here a year or so ago. His fine horses and open purse were the property of every one to whom he took alfancy. There are many Wall street. a fancy. There are many Wall street men who remember the genial, wealthy George Haddon Palmer, who killed himself in a lonely marsh. He had an office within a few yards of the old stamping-ground of Jay Gould. Palmer made a fortune, his customers comprising some of New York's great lawyers and club men with speculative tendencies. His prosperity led him to rapid habits. At times he would disappear for a menth and reappear in rags. Personally one of the nattiest men on the street, he was a sight to behold after one of his disappearances. He would resume his fine manners and courteous bearing, and everything would be lovely for many months. He always came to Atlantic City when these sprees seized him and spend a fortune here, and at the expiration of one of them went home, and killed himself. The statement is made as a warning to a half-dozen popular and wealthy young Philadelphians who are here on the same road, seeking its terminus as soon as possible. The bill of a livery stable man against one of them for last week's driving amounted to over $300.

A Remarkable Rattler.

The greatest set of rattles ever cut The greatest set of ratties ever cut from a rattlesnake are now on exhibi-tion in the office of the treasurer of Lycoming county, at Williamsport, Pa. The string measures eight and one-half inches and contains forty-five rattles. The biggest string of rattles on record previous to this was taken from the hig The biggest string of rattles on record previous to this was taken from the big snake killed near Westport last week. That string measured four inches in length and contained twenty-one rattles. The snake that bore it was the biggest one ever killed in the state, being seven feet long. The most curious fact connected with the monster Williamsport set of rattles is that it was taken from a snake less than three feet long, the rattles forming almost one-forth of the reptile's entire length. If it is true that a rattlesnake grows a rattle every year after the first year, rattle every year after the first year, the snake must have been forty-six years old. This freak among snakes was killed by County Treasurer Eldred in the Pine creek region.

THE WORLD IS DULL.

The world is dull, the world is blind, The world is dull, the world is blind,
More tasteless every day;
It gives you no good name, my child,
And has a deal to say.
The world is dull, the world is blind,
And must judge you amiss;
The world has never known the fire,
The sweetness, of your kiss.
—Rennell Rodd, after Heine.

for Fall and Winter is now open. This announcement is sufficient to those who are familiar with the excellence of the justly famous "Jouvin Kid Gloves." They are, without exception, the best fitting glove made, are unsurpassed for wear, and cost us more than poorly wearing or ill-fitting gloves of inferior manufactures.

Next week will be the last during which orders will be received and delivery be guaranteed before the holidays. These embroideries must not be confounded with the simple Initial Handkerchiefs so very common. We embroider monogram or full names in any desired style. The latest in this line is a fac-simile of your autograph embroidered in white or colors.
