Sir William Gordon Cumming Relates His Story of the Scandal.

His Highness of Wales Attracts a Very Fashionable Audience.

Many of England's Wealthy and Noble Throng the Court.

No Room for the Common Rabble at This Fashionable Event.

London, June 1 .- The high court of Justice to-day presented a scene, inside and out, such as could be witnessed. probably in no other city in the world. Prominent members of the "high nobility" were to appear as principals in a sensational trial—a gambling scandal and the assured appearance of the heir apparent as one of the principal witnesses proved sufficient to draw to the vicinity the usual crowd of sightseers who naturally gather at the scene of all important trials. The latter waited patiently, laughing and jesting, playing practical jokes, and guying everybody guyable, enjoying the warm sunshine and eager to obtain even the faintest glimpse of the celebrities in the world of the "upper ten" who were expected to be present. Inside the court room resembled the scene of some highly fashionable reception, rather than a grim law court, where an important case was to be brought to trial. Women, strange to say, predominated in the audience, and in the long gallerie, ladies, charmingly brilliant in triumphs of the modiste's art, filled the whole available space. Others, more favored and equally bewitchingly dressed, occupied reserved seats on the bench. All the ladies were talking in an animated manner and flashing their lorgnettes here and there, studying out the identity of everybody of note present, and criticising the most conspicuous costumes in the most lively manner. One and all, ladies and gentlemen, were most eager for the "show," for such to them it seemed to be, to begin in real earnest. The occasion for all this was the trial of the Lord Coleridge, in disposing of the seats in the court room, had to resist much pressure from swarms of aristocratic notabilities, male and female, who desired to be present and who seemed to be under the impression that they had a right to be present and that it was for the lord chief justice to see that this these displacements are the second night of the baccarat games at Tanbycroft on Sept. 5, 1890, the Prince of Wales was banker, and that Arthur Wilson won five "coups" running, which Sir William thought was very good "for a novice." At the end of the game, the plaintiff continued, the Prince of Wales laughingly said: "Cumming, how came you to win so much?"—referring to the fact that I had won £225 in two nights' play. To this I replied: "Well, sir, I could not help winning with such luck," showing the prince a card on alleged right was respected. But Lord Coleridge was not so easily "bulldozed." He gave orders that admission to the court was to be by special tickets only, and he announced that he would be able to accommodate only a few of the most distinguished applicants with seats beside him on the bench, reserving the main body of the court for members of the bar, witnesses, jurymen and bar, witnesses, jurymen and about thirty-five newspaper representa-tives. The first tremor of excitement was caused by the arrival in the court room of Sir William Gordon Cumming. the plaintiff, accompanied by his counsel, Solicitor General Clarke and Mr. sel, Solicitor General Charles Gill. Opposed to these legal lights are Sir Charles Russell, as chief counsel, The plaintiff was cool and calm, but apparently not in the best of humor. Wales, the Royal Good Fellow, Attends as a Witness.

London, June 1.—The heir apparent entered the court shortly after 11 p'clock, accompanied by his private ecretary, Sir Francis Norris, K. C. M. G. Both the prince and his secretaay passed through the court room, the buzz of half-whispered conversation reasing as the prince was recognized, and were escorted to seats especially reserved for them on the bench. No soonwas sworn, and Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, taking his seat on the bench and addressing the solicitor general, Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., leading counsel for the plaintiff, said in substance that he desired that the Prince of Wales should be kent in court as should be kent as the court as should be kent in court as should be kent as the court as the should be kept in court as short a time as possible. To this the solicitor general replied that he could not say exactly when the Prince of Wales would be called upon to give his testimony in the case, but he begged to assure the lord chief justice that he desired most he artily to serve the prince's conven-ience so far as possible. Sir Edward Clarke, amid almost breathless silence, then solemnly and sententiously opened the case for the plaintiff. He said that the charge was a most serious one. The solicitor general detailed the circumstances of the now famous card party at Tanbycroft, Arthur Wilson's residence, during the Doncaster meeting, in September, 1890. Baccarat, said the solicitor general, had never before been played at Tanbycroft. It would behis duty,to put the Prince of Wales and Gen. Owen Williams in the witness box, and their testimony would satisfy the jury that they saw nothing Batisfy the jury that they saw nothing wrong on the part of Sir William Gor-don Cumming, whose system of play was to double his stakes if he lost until he recovered his losses, and then he reverted to his original stake. After having cleverly outlined the situation Sir Edward, dropping his clear, sharp, business-like and matter-of-fact statement of the case, concluded his address by making a brilliant, eloquent and passionate appeal to the jury on behalf of his client, who he claimed, was plainty the victim of circumstances and ly the victim of circumstances and of a false desire to avoid a scandal which would have implicated his hosts at Tanbycroft and his old friends who played baccarat with him there. Sir William Gordon Cumming, the plaint-iff, then entered the witness box in a perfectly cool manner, and with a cer-tain amount of jauntiness in his de-meanor. He answered Sir Edward Clarke's questions in a clear and well-pitched voice, which could be heard all over the court room, and kept his back turned towards the Prince of Wales, a fact which was considerably commented upon unfavorably by the audience.

ON THE STAND.

Famous Card Game.

LONDON, June 1.-While giving his testimony to-day, Sir William Gordon Cumming was the typical aristocrat. He leaned easily on the edge of the wit ness box, coolly surveying the court and the evidence, seemingly confident of himself and his case. He said that the Prince of Wales acted as banker upon the occasion referred to, and that Gen. Williams was the croupier. His (the plaintiff's) attention was not called the first night, Sept. 8, to the complaint made against him. On the following evening, he said, when dressing for dinner, Lord Coventry and Gen. Williams came to him in his bed room at Tanbycroft, and the former said:

"Cumming, something very disagreeable has occurred. Some people staying here have objected to your manner.

ing here have objected to your manner of playing baccarat."

To this he replied: "My God! What do you mean?"

Lord Coventry, the plaintiff said, then repeated his former remark, adding that people said that he (Cumming) had, while playing baccarat the previous evening, resorted to foul play. The plaintiff said that he then replied that this was a foul, abominable charge and a deliberate falsehood, adding, addressing Lord Coventry and Gen. Williams:
"What am I to do? You two are my old friends. For goodness' sake say what is to be done." The plaintiff then remarked that he added to this request, that he placed the whole matter enthat he placed the whole matter en-tirely in their hands, and that after dinner, at the suggestion of Lord Cov-entry and Gen. Williams, he, the plaintiff, had an interview with the Prince of Wales, to whom he repudiated the charge brought against him, and

To this, according to the plaintiff, the Prince of Wales replied: "What can you do? There are five accusers."

Sir William said that he answered: "My first impulse is to publicly insult my accusers upon the race course to-

To this the Prince of Wales, the plaintiff testified, replied: "What is the use of that? There are five people

Continuing, Sir William said that half ap hour after his interview with the Prince of Wales he was summoned to another room, where he found Lord Coventry and Gen. Williams, who told him that the only way to avoid a "horrible scandal" was to sign the document which had already been produced and read in court by Sir Edward Clarke. The plaintiff added:

The baronet concluded his testimony with a solemn and im-pressive denial that he ever cheated at cards at Tanbycroft or anywhere else.

The cross-examination of the plaintiff was then commenced by Sir Charles Russell, leading counsel for the defendants. The plaintiff said he had no reason to suspect malice upon the part of any of the defendants. Sir Charles then carelessly glanced at a paper, and turning towards the plaintiff, who had evidently nerved himself to face Sir-Charles' fire, continued: "And does this express your opinion" (reading): "The worst of it is that I feel that they are acting perfectly conscientiously in are acting perfectly conscientiously in the matter, and they believed that they ish nature. did see me resort to foul play.' don me," cried Sir William quickly, drawing himself up, his eyes sparkling, and his whole manner denoting considerble excitement,

Answering another question put to him by Sir Charles Russell, the plaintiff said that he had received a memorandum signed by the Pripage of memorandum signed by the Prince of Wales and by Lord Coventry and Gen. Sydney, Ohio, June 1 .- George Rhinehart, of Clay townsnip, is a mod-ern Bluebeard in effect, though his nethods are slower, but scarcely less brutal. Rhinehart is a German, about 55 years of age, robust of frame, violent of temper, and forbidding in appearance. He has lived for years a halfsolated life on an out-of-the-way farm in Clay township. For years he has been an object of suspicion, but only in the last few days, and mainly then through the awful exposure of a paper of this place, has his atrocious character been exposed and the people aroused. The law will now be given a chance. If it fails to act Rhinehart is likely to see a long night. He lives in a tumble-down house, around which he has erected a high fence. Inside this are a drove of pigs, a dozen dogs, and filth beyond description. When twenty-seven years of age he married eighteen-year-old Nanny McKinnon, of Logan county. He made her a slave at once. NO HOPE FOR SIR JOHN. The Stricken Statesman Is Sink ing Rapidly. OTTAWA, Ont., June 1.-Sir John Macdonald's hours are numbered. All day he has exhibited an increasing weakness, and as a precautionary measure, he is awakened by his attendants every two hours. The heart's action is becoming 'more feeble, indicating that life's fires are burning very low. To-day saw no cessation of the rush towards Farnscliffe. At the approaches on Sussex street a long line of vehicles blocked the roadway, and the curious throng, including many ladies, pressed up to the very gates in their anxiety to learn the latest news. The question of the leadership is being anxiously discussed. The general opinion is that Sir John Thompson will be the next premier, although a majority of the Western members favor Sir Charles Tupper. The French Conservatives are almost a unit for Sir John Thompson, and many insist upon his appointment. The matter, to a very considerable degree, rests with the govthe premier's wishes during the election campaign. Sir Charles Tupper at that the end was not far off. It is understood that Sir John has left directions in his will to e buried at Kingston Ont. MONTREAL, June 1.—Sir John Macdonald's illness and the possible political complications that may ensue in the Canadian premier's death is having a marked effect on stocks, and the Montreal market to-day was very weak and panicky, bank stocks and general stocks all showing a weak tendency. The general feeling on the street is that on Sir John's death there will be a sudden break in stocks, and the feeling is an uneasy one. Toronto, Ont., June 1.—Discussing the question of what will follow in the event of Sir John Macdonald's demise, the Globe, the principal organ of the Liberal party, says: "Hints have been thrown out about a coalition, but that is out of the question, The Liberals would not coalesce with Sir Charles Tupper or Sir Hector Langevin upon any terms marked effect on stocks, and the Mon-not coalesce with Sir Charles Tupper or Sir Hector Langevin upon any terms nor join with Abbott or Sir John Thompson, except upon a clear understanding that the national policy should be abandoned in favor of free trade with the United States. The Liberals are prepared, putting public considerations first, to do everything that is fair and reasonable, but they cannot be expected to condone things which they have condemned or to support a fiscal policy which they know to be wrone."

BRAZIL IS PROSPEROUS.

A Flattering Outlook for the Young Republic.

policy which they know to be wrong.

WASHINGTON, June 1 .- Recent in formation from Brazil gives a flattering account of the financial situation in that Republic. By a decree of the provisional government, which has now become the constitutional government of Brazil, all import duties are made payable in gold, and it is estimated that receipts from that source this year will aggregate $70,000,000. The remittances to Europe for interests on debt and on guarantees of interest on enterprises whose shares are held there, and for purchases of was and railroad material, diplomatic and consular service, will aggregate but $15,000,000. Now when the liquidation of many of the doubtful enterprises is at hand, the government is beginning to relax its hold on its accumulation of gold, and the country, with excellent crops or its staple products, finds its exports increasing in a remarkable man-ner, reducing the trade balance against Brazil with Great Britain and France and increasing the balance in its favor against Germany, as well as that against the United States, which must be, for the most part, liquidated in London. The present crop of coffee is very large, the deliveries for January and February of this year aggregating 110,000 tons, and the next crop is estimated at 757,500 tons. Rubber is firm and very high. Competent judges estimate the total exportations from Brazil for 1891 will amount to $200,000, which, with the ruling high prices for the leading articles of export, will render the financial condition of Brazil sound and easy.

OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

Change in Favor of the United States in Costa Rico,

WASHINGTON, June 1.-Trade statis tics of Costa Rico for the year show a remarkable change in imports, the United States now having a larger trade with Costa Rico than England, France or Germany. The total value of imports this year was $4,250,000, of which the United States furnished $1,500,000. A report from the British consul to his government just made public expresses surprise that the United States should surprise that the United States should now stand first on the list, when a few years ago its shipments did not nearly approach those of Great Britain. He adds that this "requires some looking into," and that as soon as the official figures appear in detail he will endeav-or to ascertain what are the articles im-ported that have superceded those of former years." The total exports for the year amount to $6,600,000. The coffee crop was 220,000 sacks, of which 145,000 went to Great Britain and 45,000 to the United States.

NEW YORK, June 1 .- Morris park, improved a hundred fold, was thrown open to the public to-day under weather conditions that could not have been more favorable. Fully 10,000 persons enjoyed the day's sport, a crowd composed largely of the old Jerome park element. Society also was well represented. It was noticeable that all the old-time regulars were on hand. Pretty women, music, royally bred horses and everything else necessary for a pleasant time were there, and, as three favorites were successful, every one went home satisfied. The track was not fast, but afforded a good foothold, and some of ernor general, who. it is said, learned the contests were quite exciting. There has been so much complaint lately about starters displaying undue severity that time was his choice. Hon. J. J. C. Abbott is also strongly spoken of.
