tor, published in 1617, retails the memorable "chestnut" on the subject, says the Family Herald. He says the "tearme came first out of this tale: That a citizen's sonne, riding with his father into the country, is asked, when he heard a horse neigh, what the horse did. His father answered: The horse doth neigh. Riding farther, he heard a cocke crowing, and said: Doth the cocke neigh, too? and therefore cockney or cocknie, by inversion thus: incock q. incoctus—i. e., raw or unripe in countrymen's affairs." This does not satisfy Dr. Murray and his assistants. A cockney was originally a cockered child, one suckled too long, a mother's darling, one tenderly brought came first out of this tale: That a citicockered child, one suckled too long, a mother's darling, one tenderly brought up—hence a squeamish or effeminate fellow, a milksop. The word is often used in the last sense by Elizabethan and earlier writers. On Chidermas Day (Dec. 26) the students of Lincoln's Inn chose a "King of Cockneys" to be master of the revels. The word came to be applied derisively to a townsman, as the type of effeminacy, in contrast to the hardier inhabitants of the country. Then it was localized to mean one horn Then it was localized to mean one born in the city of London, "particularly to connote the characteristics in which the born Londoner is supposed to be infe-rior to other Ebglishmen." The townsman had his revenge by the use he made of "clown." The original of "clown" in the Teutonic languages

The result was that the filt received a formal note from him telling her that he would call on a certain the solitude of telling her that he would call on a certain evening for a final answer. He called and met with a frigid reception. His affianced told him that her decision was irrevocable and handed him a package containing all his gifts to her.

There He Is Found by Antipodean Aborigines and Cared For.

How He Adopted Their Strange Customs and Finally Escaped.

But He Had a Lively Time Before He Left the Dusky Savages.

The doings of white men among the aborigines of Australia are indeed interesting records, and many of the stories seem stranger than fiction, especially when there exists in the minds of Englishmen an idea that race of mankind partakes a little of savage cannibals, says Chambers' Journal. Among those persons who have abandoned civilization, and lived for a while among the Australian blacks, as that face is generally but wrongly called, the most interesting, perhaps, is James Morril, who spent seventeen years among that

From casks, rigging, spars, etc., a raft was formed, upon which the survivors, after securing a cask of water and some tinned meat and soup, drifted from the wreck. Their sufferings during the days that followed were fearful.

At last, after forty-four days from that on which it drifted from the wreck, the raft was washed ashore on the

Shortly after landing Mr. Wilmot and Gooley died, and Millar, finding a native canoe, paddled away in it in the hope of discovering food and relief; but he never returned, his body being found some time after by the natives. Bowen stands. Twelve months after the death of the captain the young apprentice died, and Morril was left sole survivor of the party, with only the aborigines for his companions. During his residence with this tribe of the Australian race, Morril accompa-nied them in their marches, fought with them in their tribal wars, went with them on their hunting expeditions into the country, on their fishing excursions to the seashore. He soon forgot all European habits, and forgot almost his mother tongue, becoming, in fact, a real domesticated aboriginal. During the early part of January, 1863, the tribe with which he lived organized a kan-garoo battue in the near vicinity of a sheep station on the lower Burdekin, and one day Morrill was detailed with a party of the women to look out for the whites.

One of the women who had strolled on by herself soon told Morril that she had seen a white man's but and when had seen a white man's hut, and when she was directing him to the locality they sighted some sheep. Upon Morris declining to go on the woman ran back. He then went to a water-hole, where he washed himself, so as to appear as white washed nimser, so so to appear as white as possible, and walked on in the direction of the sheep. Soon he came in sight of a yard, and then a hut, from which he heard a voice, and at that instant felt contused and alarmed, and was almost impelled to run away. Mounting as high as he could on the fance, he called the table sailor's eality.

Mounting as high as he could on the fence, he called out the sailor's salutation he had so often repeated to himself when alone: "What cheer, shipmate?"

On hearing this, one man looked out of the hut, and, seeing Morril, who was wild-looking in appearance, immediately called out: "Come out and bring the guns, Wilson; here is a naked man that is either white or yellow, but is not black!" Morril then threw up his arms and called out: "I am a shipwrecked sailor. You would not shoot a British subject!" Then the men, who were stockmen, and had regarded him as some sort of a bushranger, took him into the hut and gave him bread to eat, which a t first he could not swallow. That night he returned to the aborigines When he told them that he intended to return to the whites the natives at first understood that he would be away for three or four days only, and begged of him to talk to his countrymen and tell them not to shoot the natives. When they learned that he was going a long way off to see a great many whites, and that he would be away three or four months, some of them declared that he was going to leave them clared that he was going to leave them altogether.

They begged of him to induce his countrymen to let them have at least the swamps and salt-water creeks upon condition that they (the natives) abandon the upper reaches and river. Morril was not, however, long to survive his release. James Gordon, at that time the sub-collector of customs at Bowen, took him to Sir George Ferguson Bowen, the governor of Queensland, who, however, took little interest in the "Wild White Man." While in that city he joined the Baptist church. Returning to Bowen, he was employed in the customs department as one of the crew customs department as one of the crew of the pilot boat, and in 1864 he married a servant of the police magistrate of that place. The museum was thronged at 7 o'clock, when the lecturer called the attention of the gaping crowd to the pretty little snake charmer. She handled two or three large snakes without danger, while the audience shuddered. danger, while the audience shuddered as they saw the clammy reptiles coil around her neck and warst. All the was child's play, however, to the task of handling a four-foot Arizona rattlesnake which she had reserved for the last.

The reptile seemed to be unusually restless, and Little Dot hesitated whether to disturb it or not. Finally, thinking that the audience would cast thinking that the audience would cast imputations on her courage if she did not take it out of the box, she reached down and grasped it.

The reptile began to hiss, but, nothing daunted, the snake-charmer lifted up the rattler. Like a flash it curled itself around her forearm, and darting its head forward, fastened its fangs in her cheek.

The woman realized that she had probably received her death wound, and, probably remembering her two helpless babes at home, fell on the floor,

A coach was sent for, and the snake-charmer was hurried to the New York hospital. Dr. Sherow made a hasty examination, and then announced that the woman would in all probability recover. "If she lives, and she doubtless will," said Dr. Sherow, "it will not be because of the whisky that was ad ministered to her or the treatment she will receive her or the treatment she will receive here, but because of the heroism of Mr. Ring in sucking out the poison before it had had time to enter the young woman's blood."

Did the Water Snake Charm a Crowd of Small Fishes?

Then we laid ourselves quietly down upon the ground by the pool, one on each side, and re-mained motionless for a few minutes, and were rewarded by a sight entirely new to us.

The water was perfectly clear and not above two feet deep, the day caim and bright, and the proceedings below the surface easily observed. In the deepest part of the pool a solid phalanx of little fish (if I may call it) was swimming around and around in a ring of about two feet in diameter, the band being about six inches wide and apparently two or three layers deep.

Around and around they went, at the least motion on our part breaking ranks, to resume their circus at once when we were quiet again. We were interested, of course and puzzled and we were of course, and puzzled, and we were tried for half an hour or more to learn the cause of such unusual movements. Our talk (for we did talk) did not disturb them, from which we inferred that they could not hear us. Our slightest movement did, from which we inferred they could see us.

Carefully crawling a little nearer we discovered the center of the moving elaborate works, tried to substantiate that theory. I never believed it, and I certainly never heard of snakes charming fish: but what were these shad doing? Were they charmed?

If they were afraid of his snakeship, why didn't they run away, as they did when we stirred? Why, when our disturbance ceased, did they persistently return and take up their ceaseless round return and take up their ceaseless round in so dangerous a neighborhood? These are conundrums that I can't answer.
