CLEVER SCHOLARS Present a Charming Dramatiza-

tion at the High School. "Donatello, a Dream," is a very clever dramatization of Hawthorne's "Marble Fawn," by Basil Louis Burwell, a member of the senior class of the high school. The play was preschool by the pupils yesterday afternoon. The auditorium was filled to its complete capacity by the students and relatives of friends. The entertainment was really a meritorious effect. was really a meritorious affair, and ap plause was lavish throughout. The ncensus of opinion was that Miss Helen Austin carried off the honors, and this is no small praise. Considering that the play was produced by amateurs, it was picturesque and excellently pre-sented. The young author appeared in the title role, and, had he spoken his lines a little louder, he would have been a complete success. Kleist's string and mandolin orchestra supplied the music, and the whole was a delight. Follow-

At the close of the performance, and just as the curtain was rung down upon the last act, a spontaneous call for the dramatist, Mr. Burwell, broke from the enthusiastic audience, and it did not sul side until the author appeared before the footlights. In a voice that displayed deep emotion he assured the large audience of his unequivocal appreciation of the reception with which his initial effort had met. He was so overcome, indeed, that he found it impossible to express his gratitude. As it was, his words were eloquent and to the point.
