EMPEROR WILLIAM'S ATTEMPT TO RECONCILE PHINCE BISMARCK.

GEERMAN SYMPATTER AROUNDS.

No Jealousy Exists Toward the Prince in Government Circles, Whose Return to Power Is Considered Impossible - Freach and Russian Politics-Europe's Peace Depends on the Czar.

BERIAN, Sept. 28 .- One of the princi pal topics of conversation in Berlin during the past few days has been the probable outcome of Emperor William's attempt to effect a reconciliation with Prince Bismarck. The latter, it will be remembered, went to Kissingen some time ago to take the waters. While there he was taken sick, very scriously so, it has been said, and Emperor Willeam, who was attending the Austrian army manouvers in the vicinity of Guens, Bungary, telegraphed to him expressing sympath y for him in his ill ness, and offering one of the imperial castles to him as a residence, it having been said that the sanitary conditions of Prince Bismarck's rest dence, Freidrichsruhe, near Hamburg, were not what they might be. This ineident, under some circumstances, would have been scarcely more than noteworthy, but in view of the relations existing, or rather the non-existence of relations between the emperor and the ex-chancellor, it has assumed important proportions in the political world. The adversaries of Chancellor von Caprivi openly proclaim that the emperor sent the telegram to Prince Bismarck with-out Von Caprivi's knowledge. This is strongly denied by the chancellot's friends. In order to ascertain the exact facts a representative of the United

The chancellor was found, attended by Col. Ebmeyer, his adjutant, in the Lowe market platz. Both were attired in plain clothes. They had been breakfasting in the Freundschafts-Saat. The unted Press had a conversation with Col. Bomeyer, who said that the fact that Prince Bisharck was dangerously ill only came to the emperor through Chancellor von Caprivi, who saw the telegram amounting the fact that had been sent by Dr. Schwenninger, the prince's physician, to the United Press, The chancellor then caused inquiries to be made, but he experienced the greatest difficulty in ascertaining the truth. Privy Councilor Kinderlon finally learned the real condition of the prince, and brought the news to the chancellor, who was then at Stuttgart. Count von Caprivi at once informed Emperor William, whose first impulse was to telegraph to the prince.

After considering the probable consequences of such a step in all their bearings the emperor decided to postpone any action until he should have a chance to confer with the king of Saxony. Upon meeting the king of Saxony at Guens, Emperor William was urzed to execute his high-minded inspiration without delay and send to Prince Biswithout delay and send to Frince Bis-marck the telegram of sympatry in which he tendered the use of one of the imperial castles. A copy of the tele-gram was sent to Chancellor von Ca-privi, who desires the world to know without reserve, and that like every German patriot, he harbors no ill-teeling against his predecessor, even though he has been the object of persistent attacks by the latter. Count von Caprivi thinks it quite natural that Prince Bismark should consider him inferior to himself as chancellor, and holds that any other man succeeding the prince, except, perhaps, Viscount Robert Bismarck, would meet with the same criticism from the ex-chancellor. same criticism from the ex-chancellor. In those opinions Count you Caprivi is unquestionably succere. In the chancellor's circle no jealousy exists toward the prince, whose return to power as either holding office or as adviser to the emperor is considered impossible. Before going to Carlsbad Chaucellor yon Caprivi held a council of the ministers, to whom he communicated the condition of Prince Bismarck's health and the emperor's intentions.

Every one approved of his majesty's proposed action, and it was even contemplated that the emperor, upon his return from Hungary, might, if Prince Bismarck expressed a desire for him to do so, visit him at Kissingen.

remains hostile to the prince as a politician against whom she has also some bitter memories, but she will not begrudge the sympathy bestowed upon him in his illness. The question put by the semi-official paper is: "Will the imperial overtures for a reconciliation induce Prince Bismarck to modify his attacks upon the government policy, should he regain strength enough to resume public action?" The balance of the official opinion is that he will keep to his old course and criticise spitefully everything that the government proposes. The dampers put by the Russian official papers on the French enthusiasm are hailed here with much satisfaction. It considerably lessens the strain to find Russia disowning the estimate which considerably lessens the strain to find Russia disowning the estimate which the French press places on the Toulon demonstration. The National Zeitung says: It is not to be supposed that the French will be quite disillusionized. The experience of the last few years show that the French craze for everything Russian is too strong for that. Still, something akin to shame may here and there be feit. The French will submit to the restraint shame may here and there be feit. The French will submit to the restraint which the St. Petersburg government desires to put upon their enthusiasm and will be as ready as ever to put their last man at the czar's command. As long as this spirit of France remains as now the peace of Europe will depend on THE CZAR'S CALL and not upon after-dinner speeches at Toulon and Paris.
