Judge Belden filed his decision yesterday afternoon in the case of Hans H. Olson against the State bank, brought to enforce a double liability against the stockholders of the institution. The order allows judgment against all stockholders. The capital stock of the bank was originally $100,000, which was subsequently raised to $125,000. The tockholders claimed that the $25,000 was not legally-issued. In the order the court holds that it was. The stockholders claimed further that they were subject only to a single or that they were subject only to a single liability and not a double liability. The cour holds this point to have been conclusively settled in the case of Allen against Walsh.

Grocers Are Wroth

The Grocers' association met last evening and talked over the situation which exists between them and the commission men. It was generally conceded that the commission firms should be given one more week in which to think matters over, and if they did not come to time on the weekly payment plan proposed by the grocers, several schemes were to be the outcome. One idea was to start a grocers' commission house, every grocer to take stock; another, to patronize only one commission firm until the others only one commission firm until the others came to time; and still another to bring criminal action for conspiracy and blackmail if the commission men dared to blacklist a dealer for any failure to comply with the rules laid down.

MR. BLETHEN PUTS IN ANOTHER DAY TESTIFYING IN THE LOWRY CASE.

A FREE FLOW OF LETTERS.

THE EDITOR SAYS HE WAS "FAITH-FUL AS A DOG" TO MR. LOWRY.

HE IS SHARPLY CROSS-EXAMINED.

An Amusing Tilt in Regard to Mr. Blethen's Loss of $50,000 in the Star.

Alden J. Blethen was on the stand again yesterday in his suit against Thomas Lowry. He said he had re ceived a letter from Mr. Lowry in April, 1891, but had not read it until autumn. A note accompanied it, he testified, which was lost when he moved from the Bank of New England. A letter was read to the jury regarding an alleged shortage in the accounts of the Tribune as reported by Mr. Mur-phy. In this letter Mr. Blethen expressed disappointment because he had not secured a written contract from Mr. Lowry, "for I was as faithful as a dog to your interests," it said. Mr. Lowry, it said, was worth several millions of dollars more than he would have been had the Anderson-Douglas scheme gone through. The latter admitted that the city of Minneapolis was worth $10,000,000 more on account of Mr. Lowry's lines. It insisted that the writer had lost $100,000 in cold cash. without beating a man out of a dollar. and two years of "tremendous" hard work had been lost also. "These are bald-headed facts," said the letter in Letters from Mr. Lowry to Mr. Blethen under date of June 2 and Dec. 10, 1891, were read. Mr. Lowry stated that he had only acted as Mr. Blethen's friend, and had indorsed $150,000 of notes for him only to save the $100,000 Blethen had put in. "In short," said the letter, "you have taken out every cent you ever put in with the paper. I trust for your own sake that you can show clean hands, and explain where it has gone, and show vouchers for it all."

In his answer to this letter Blethen wanted to know how there could be any charge in regard to "clean hands" when the paper was the sole property of the writer. Witness stated that he held a conference with Mr. Lowry, in the latter's office on the afternoon of Dec. 28, 1891. He had given notice that he was coming to demand an explanation of the charges made. "I proposed to stay until I had it explained or an apology made for making it."

He said Mr. Lowry apologized. A letter from Mr. Blethen Dec. 29, offered to settle the whole matter if Mr. Lowry would deed a piece of property to Mr. Blethen, which Mr.Lowry figured worth $50,000, but which was actually worth $20,000, and which Mr. Lowry would not miss, and that they should shake hands and call the whole affair quits.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The witness explained that there was an interview in which Mr. Lowry asked the witness regarding a report to a commercial agency in which witness had stated that he had $30,000 coming from Mr. Lowry. The latter wanted to know how he came to owe Mr. Blethen $30,000, whereat Mr. Blethen reminded Mr. Lowry of his alleged promise.

know of it."

The court ruled out a lot of talk relative to an alleged attempt to pur-chase the Globe. Mr. Blethen said Mr. Lowry spoke of the unfriendly relations between him and the press, and wanted to buy both the Globe and the Tribune.

The witness was then turned over to Judge Koon, who spent the rest of the afternoon cross-examining him. Mr. Blethen said May 28, 1889, was the date of his second purchase of the Tribune, the consideration being $250,000, with an addition of $12,000. William Henry Smith was not present, but Mr. Blethen was authorized to sign for him. Speak. ing of a letter to Mr. Haskell the ess explained that Mr. Lowry given him two copies, one to go to Mr. Haskell, and that this was the only agreement Mr. Lowry had ever made regarding the purchase of the Tribune This letter was a short note from Mr. Lowry to Mr. Haskell, informing the latter that he would sign the notes. Witness stated that when he took charge of the Tribune in 1889, it was in a prosperous condition, that is, it was lying expenses.

"What were the profits for the first eleven months?" said Judge Koon. "I can't say."
"Did you not write a letter to Mr.

Lowry in which you told him the profits were $32,000?"
"I can't say."

"Was not the business so prosperous that you did not care whether Mr. Smith came in or not?" "I can't say."
"Did not Mr. Smith want to come in and did you not refuse because he wanted the controlling interest, and wanted the controlling interest, and you would not give it up?"

Judge Koon then presented telegrams tending to show that Blethen didn't want Smith to come in for more than want Smith to come in for more than one-third interest.

The defense read what it claimed was a damaging letter, which informed Mr. Lowry that he had purchased the Trib-une in his own right, for himself entirely, having put in $100,000 in cash. This letter also informed Mr. Lowry of the intended purchase of the Evening Star. Witness admitted that Mr. Lowry knew nothing of the purchase of the Star until it had happened.

"Mr. Lowry did not propose to you the purchase of the Tribune at first?"

"Mr. Palmer proposed it at first."

"Then Mr. Lowry did not propound

the scheme to you?"
"Well, not technically." Witness admitted Witness admitted that he had thought that the idea of the purchase of the Tribune was a good one. The offer struck him as a good business proposi-tion, and that the offer was far less than he had expected.

You were not induced to buy it by anything Mr. Lowry said about it?" "I can't quite say that."

The witness admitted that the securing of the Star was without the outlay of any money.
"Was not the Star, that you tacked on to the Tribune, a dead loss of at least $50,000 or $60,000?" "No, sir. It laid the foundation for the Evening Tribune, and ultimate results must be looked at. While it was run it lost $1,000 per month."

"Now you put in $46,000 as the value of a paper which you know lost money? Were you not worse off by money? Were you not worse on 3, $50,000 than if you had not bought that paper?"

"I don't think so." "Well, let's see what you say about it Here is a long letter to George K. Shaw, April 14, 1891."

Witness read it through and admitted sending it. Only a portion of the letter was read, although the whole was put in evidence. It was a reply to a letter Still Mr. Blethen denied that the paper was a loss, as in the end it was a great saving.

"What did you get with the Star besides Messrs. Shaw and Bennett that was of any value?" Witness stated that there was a circulation of 17,000. One of the main schemes was to get the rival out of the way. A press and a small outfit was the rest. The good will was practically all that was secured by the purchase.

"So, to get rid of Bennett, you gave him all the material stuff you secured him all the material stuff you secured. when you purchased the Star, and $23,-000 besides?"

"You call that pretty good business policy, do you?"
"I thought so."
"Now, you don't want to have Mr.

Lowry pay you for that loss, do you?"
There was no answer, and a recess was taken until Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Boy Meets a Horrible Death in ar Elevator.

Elevator.

Michael Rackner, employed as elevator boy by the Northwestern Soap company, 411 Main street southeast, was fatally injured by a falling elevator yesterday morning. Crushed and bleeding, but still alive, he was removed to Asbury hospital, where death ended his sufferings at 1 p. m.

When the accident occurred the boy was on the second floor of the building unloading soap boxes from the elevator. The machine worked with a derrick attachment of primitive design, and the combined weight of the load caused it to gravitate downward. Rackner, who had stepped for a moment to the second floor, saw the move, and leaned forward to replace the ratchet and prevent the descent. Simultaneously with the act the pully, iron wheel and rope broke, precipitating the boy to the basement, with the contents.

Immediate assistance was given him, but it immediate assistance was given him, but it was seen that a piece of the iron wheel had penetrated his side, causing a large gap. At the hospital ineffectual attempts were made by the physicians to stop the flow of blood from the wound, and the boy gradually weakened until his death. He was eighteen years of age, lived with his parents at 722 Twelfth avenue southeast, and enjoyed the esteem of his friends and confidence of his employes. The body was removed to the county morgue, where an inquest will be held today.

ATTACKED BY A MANIAC.

M. Moulton had a rough and tumble

Dr. S. M. Moulton had a rough and tumble fight with a raving maniac early last evening at the New Columbia hotel, 113 Washington avenue south. Although he emerged from the affray unharmed, he had an experience which he is not likely to forget for some time, and which might have resulted far more seriously for him.

He was summoned to the hotel to attend a man who was said to be very sick and suffering great pain. The man's name is Nick Kulmes, and he has been employed for some time as a porter at the hotel. He is known among his familiars as Jumbo, and is a son of Dr. Bertha Shepard. From Kulmes' appearance Dr. Moulton supposed him to be suffering great pain, and attempted to administer chloroform, and thus ease his suffering. Kulmes did not take kindly to the treatment, and sprang upon the doctor with minister chloroform, and thus ease his suffering. Kulmes did not take kindly to the treatment, and sprang upon the doctor with the fury of a wild animal. He is a powerful man, and, although the doctor made a good stand, he could not begin to hold his own, and went down before the furious onslaught. The madman pinioned the doctor's arms to the floor and glared at him, frothing at the mouth. There were half-a-dozen men in the room at the time, and they all made their escape, leaving the doctor to his fate. Kulmes snapped at the doctor and bit him in a number of places on the arms, all the while snarling like a dog. Fearful that hydrophobia would result if the man bit him through the skin, the doctor made a superhuman effort and got his foot under Kulmes' chin. Then he kicked, and the half-choked man fell off on the floor. The doctor got out of the room as soon as possible, locked it and sent in a call for police. A squad of six policemen soon made their appearance, and when they opened the door of the room found that Kulmes had amused himself by battering down the bed with his head after the fashion of a goat. The bed was literally broken to pieces, and the man's head was bleeding from a number of self-inflicted cuts. pieces, and the man's head was bleeding from Passing then to the subject of Ar-nenia, Mr. Balfour said: "Mr. Salismenia, Mr. Baifour said: Mr. Sains-bury's speech to the Non-conformist Unionist association accurately de-scribed Great Britain's obligations. There is nothing in the Berlin or Cyprus treaties requiring the powers or England singly to go to war to compi the Turks to carry out their pledges."

Mr. Balfour pointed out the impossibility of individual action on the part of Great Britain. He said in this part of Great Britain. He said in this connection: "Short of bringing upon ourselves the prospect of a possible European conflagration, we could have done no more in the direction of helping those unhappy people than we have done. Let the house and the country remember that we alone among the nations of Europe (I don't include the United States which I include the United States, which I know at one time was with us) feel deeply and earnestly on this subject of the horrors done in Armenia. QUESTION OF ARBITRATION.

"America attaches more unrestricted value to that mode of adjusting controversies than has hitherto been done here; but I believe that means may be found by a combination of negotiations with arbitration to bring the matters which are not difficult to a settlement. The great obstacle has been Venezuela's extravagant claims, and it was not following the customary international policy when even Venezuela broke off in the diplomatic relations because they could not obtain the precise limit of territory desired. But for that action I believe the difficulty would have been settled long ago."

With reference to permanent arbitration, the prime minister expressed the belief that between the extremes of unrestricted arbitration of all subjects which it was impossible for the two nations to adopt and the former practice, which perhaps used arbitration too little, a middle term may be found which will effectually diminish the chance of conflict.

"Now as to Armenia," was Lord Salisbury's way of taking up the next topic of his speech.
"Lord Rosebery's spirited denunciation of the government would have been more formidable if it had any foundation in fact. But I defy him to find any stipulation in the Berlin treaty that could be construed into an undertaking or threat to fight Turkey on behalf of the Armenians." QUESTION OF ARBITRATION. tor, visited the jail and identified the prisoners as the two men he saw hag-gling with a negro about the price of some service on the morning after the Pearl Bryan murder. He had warned the sultan, he continued, of what would happen if he ignored the opin-ion of Europe, and he repeated that the sultan was running very great danger by such de-fiance if he relied on the European fear of what would happen if the Turkish empire dis-appeared. He was inclined to believe that Europe would delay such a catastrophe to the longest possible moment, but if the present longest possible moment, but if the present state of things continued its natural conse-quences could not be indefinitely delayed. Lord Rosebery had accused the government of inaction, but when in May last he himself had been in power he did not give any sign of resorting to force if England's demands were not conceded. Upon the conclusion of the speech the address was agreed to.
