Gen. John B. Sanborn, the president of the Sons of the American Revolution, presided over the assemblage, which represented both societies in about equal numbers. True to American spirit, which recognizes the precedence of business over pleasure, the meeting first listened to the verbal report of Rukard Hurd, the president of the Minnesota Society of the Sons of the Revolution, who has just returned from the congress of the two soci-

Mr. Hurd told in detail of the progress of the union movement by the two societies, which had met in separate sessions in Cincinnati, but had nevertheless agreed upon a constitution. Mr. Hurd then read the proposed consti-

CHANGES HIS PLEA TO GUILTY

W. W. ERWIN APPEALS TO JUDGE

LEWIS FOR A ST. CLOUD SENTENCE.

SILENT

Cloak That May Cover an Administration Scandal-Story of the Crime.

Much to the surprise of many Thomas Furey, the young man who tried to bunco George Roebuck out of his money, and finding the boy still had some left, deliberately held him up in broad daylight on the street and robbed him of $700 in gold, changed his plea yesterday to that of guilty to the inlictment against him. Thereby a trial which was expected to develop some sensational revelations concerning the city detective and police forces is averted, and the detectives and police are breathing easier.

The criminal court opened at 2 p. m. After receiving the pleas of some of the other indicted prisoners, Judge Lewis called the case of the state against Thomas Furey. Furey sat over near the jury box, at the right of his counsel, W. W. Erwin. Beside him sat his wife, an attractive brunette. In both continents on land and sea, England was at war with the civilized world. Before the campaign of the Carolinas had closed, the question was, in 1781. New York or Yorktown; Clinton or Cornwallis. Which? Cornwallis, the At her left was an elder brother of Furey, who came here from Chicago. When the case was called, Mr. Erwin arose and thus addressed the court:

or Cornwains, which: contwains, the man of field duty, exposure and trial, was the victim of inadequate resources. In his final disaster he lost no honor, and in his fate, England—then struggling with the civilized world—lost no "May it please the court, I have been asked by the defendant and requested by his wife and brother to allow the defendant to withdraw his plea of not glory.

Capt. Reade reviewed briefly the movements of Earl Cornwallis to Yorktown, under the order of Sir Henry Clinton, of New York, and the plan of the campaign of the colonists and their French allies, and the strategy of Washington, which resulted in the ultimate capitulation of Cornwallis. Not in military annals was to be found a more cordial co-operation than that which characterized the navy and army of Louis XVI. in aid of the United States. Capt. Reade enumerated a list Something more than a year ago Furey had married a most estimable girl of Deering, O., who belonged to an ex-cellent family, that of the Deerings, Her father was the postmaster of Deering, and a justice of the peace, and her uncle was the wealthy Mr. Deering, of Chicago. Mr. Erwin allud-ed to the strong bond of affection existing between Furey and his wife, who in his present misfortune had stood nobly by him and ministered to his nection, Capt. Reade pointed but co-incidents between some of the mili-tary movements of each of the wars, eighty years apart. Capt. Reade, proceeding with the de-scription of the siege of Yorktown, read much of the correspondence that passed between Sir Henry Clinton and Correspondence that wants in so far as possible during his imprisonment in the county jall. Mr. Erwin pleaded in behalf of his client, that his case was one calling for a sentence to the reformatory, not to the state prison. Furey wanted to reform, As evidence of that disposition he had resolved to confess that he had com mitted a crime. In conclusion Mr. Er-win said that his duties as an attorney the allies had completely occupied all the vantage ground surrounding Yorktown. On Oct. 10, Cornwallis received a message from Clinton, at New York, informing him that he expected to render him assistance sufficient to save Yorktown. Cornwallis replied that nothing but a direct movement involving a successful naval engagement would be of any material aid in saving Yorktown. At the time of his capitulation. Cornwallis' ammunition had terminated by reason of an hone. desire on Furey's part to place him-self in a position to receive the mercy afforded by the law of the state to a man who had started on a career of crime, but who desired to repent and reform.

While Mr. Erwin was talking Mrs. Furey was moved to tears, and Furey was likewise visibly affected. At the conclusion of the lawyer's remarks, Furey stepped forward by request of the court. In response to the questions put to him by the clerk, Furey acknowledged that he desired to withdraw his plea of not guilty and plead guilty. He then entered a formal plea of guilty, but upon motion of County Attorney Anderson Judge Lewis deferred sentence until 10 a. m. today.

After Furey had been taken back to the jail, a reporter for the Globe had a talk with him.
"I don't know as I have anything further to say," responded Furey in answer to the reporter's question. "Mr. Frwin said it all I want to reform Erwin said it all. I want to reform, when I regain my liberty, I am going to follow some legitimate business. My to follow some legitimate business. My wife will live in St. Cloud as long as I remain in the reformatory, and when I get out we will go away. My home was in San Francisco. I afterward went to Portland, where I was a compositor on the Times; then I traveled on the read-for a wholescale liquor. on the road for a wholesale liquor house. My wife and I have one child." During the conversation Furey de-clared that he would do his best, if sent to the reformatory to earn a parole as soon as possible.

George Roebuck said last evening to a reporter for the Globe that his con-nection with the case would in all probability cease today. He had not been asked to remain in the city to testify against ex-Detective Gruber, he said, and if he could secure his money, which was in the custody of the court, he would start for Kansas City tonight or tomorrow, where he expects to get a position with a wholesale firm.

"There have been no arrangements made," said he, "for my keeping the authorities here posted as to my whereabouts, so that I can be summoned in case others concerned in the robbery are apprehended. I have sold my Klondike outfit and will not go to Alaska. I have friends in Kansas City sounding from the rear of Louis Raymond's second-hand store at 499 East Seventh street shortly before 8 o'clock last evening created considerable excitement in the vicinity and attracted a large crowd. When neighbors reached the scene they found Raymond back of his store in a high state of nervous excitement, and for a time he could make no explanation beyond wildly asserting that an attempt had been made upon his life, declaring that he had only escaped a would-be assassin after a desperate encounter in the store. Raymond showed no signs of a strug-gle, with the exception of several small scratches on his right hand, which he said had resulted from his seizing the revolver which was pointed at his head. After becoming somewhat calmed, Raymond said he had been reading the paper in his store when a man entered the front door, and before he could leave his chair pointed a revolver at him. The man, Raymond says, did not utter a word, but advanced toward him, wild-eyed and apparently desperate. Raymond sprang from his chair and crawled behind the counter and started on his hands and knees for the rear of the store. He says the stranger crouched down also and followed him. Back of the counter, Raymond says, the man got so close to him that he feared every moment would be his last and grabbed the revolver. Then began a struggle, he says, the stranger muttering to himself, and Raymond begging for his life, promising to give the unknown all the money in the place if he would not kill him. In the making considerable noise, when Ravmend says the man with the revolver ran out of the front door. Raymond then rushed to the rear entrance and cried for help. He says he is positive that the stranger's object was not rob-bery and declares that the man meant said to be the wife of a railroad contractor, and was taken to the central police station, where she was subjected to the questioning process, but denied all knowledge of the affair in Raymond's store. Raymond, however, says he heard a quarrel going on in the woman's apartments half an hour before the man with the pistol entered his place, and claims to have heard the Thomas woman run out on a back porch and call for help. He said he thought he knew the man, but after-ward contradicted this statement, though declaring it was the same man whom, he says, he heard upstairs. He described his assailant as a tall man with a black mustache and wearing a black derby hat. The Thomas woman's husband is said to be not over five feet mustache. Raymond says he has only known Mrs. Thomas as she has occasionally visited his store. The woman's husband is said not to have been seen about the place since last Sunday.

The young man said he had drank a glass of beer at the place who several well-daessed fellows invited him to take a fall of a game of poker. He says he lost $3.50 in three minutes and a half and then the game broke up. Then he made a rear. No one about the place was badly frighten d. Vircent says the crowd threatened to do all kinds of things to him if he did not keep still. They shook their fists in his face, he says, and told him it he called in the rolice he would likely be put in fail for gambling. Finally Vincent says the preprieter offered him 50 cents and a drink. The young man, however, left the place, he says, when several of those with whom he had been playing cards followed him to Seventh and Wabasha streets, threatening him bodly harm and offering to give back his money if he would return to the saloon. Stawski said he was badly frightened and not being able to find a policeman had run nearly all the way to the station.

The mandamus proceeding instituted by Michael J. Moriarity to compel Health Commissioner Stone to issue to Mr. Moriarity a permit as scavenzer to collect and dispose of night soil through the medium of his flushing plant on lower West side levee, were dismissed by Judge Willis yesterday. Moriarity had paid for and procured a scavenger's license and furnished his bond to the city, as required by law, but Dr. Stone had refused to give him a permit to collect night soil. But upon the hearing before Judge Willis it appeared that Mr. Moriarity had neglected to comply with an important provision of the ordinance, which says that the method of disposing of the contents of vaults and cess pools must be approved by the common council before the scavenger can carry on his business. It was shown that Moriarity had not asked for an approval of his plan and that the council had not approved it. Consequently the court granted the motion of Assistant Corporation Attorney Phillips to dismiss the application for a writ of mandamus.

Reported Fight in a South Robert

A young woman rushed up to Officer Dave Hennessey at Third and Robert streets shortly before 11 o'clock last night and informed him that some one was being killed in a saloon at the south side of the Robert street bridge. She said she had heard loud cries for help, while waiting near the saloon for a car, and the sounds of breaking glass, mingled with curses. Then two men ran out of the saloon, the woman said, and drove off with a horse and buggy, which had been standing near by. The fact that Officer Hennessey had a few minutes before seen a couple of men crossing the bridge in a light buggy gave color to the story of the fight, though the Ducas street police knew nothing of the affair, and no one injured was found near the saloon. The four per cent Debenture Stock of the Chicago Great Western Railway

The four per cent Debeniure Stock of the Unicago Great Western Railway Company pays two per cent interest on its par value of $100 per share each six months, making four per cent per annum.

It can now be bought at about seventy-four dollars per share, at which price it pays five and one-third per cent interest per annum, and at eighty dollars per share it would pay five per cent on the cost or investment.

The interest is paid to the registered owner by check sent to his address, without expense to the owner, on the fifteenth day of January and the efficienth day of July in each year.

(2) The stock is issued in $100 snares, so a small investor can purchase $100 or any multiple of $100, while bonds are usually issued in denominations of $1,000 each, so that no less than $1,000 and multiples of $1,000 can be purchased. Under the Company's rules, the local registered owner of five or more shares for six months prior thereto is entitled to free transportation to Chicago and return at the time of the annual months. cago and return at the time of the annual meeting in the first half of Sep-

As it is impracticable for small investors to purchase in New Lork or London, to accommodate those who may desire to purchase from one to twenty shares, the following banks in St. Paul are prepared to sell such small lots, to be paid for in full at the time of the purchase or at the option of the purchaser to be paid in monthly installments, as follows:

Ten dollars per share to be paid at the time the purchase is made, and ten dollars per share on the twentieth day of each succeeding month.

in two important particulars the Debenture Stock is better for small investors than a bond, viz.: vestors than a bond, viz.:

(1) The certificates being registered, if they are lost or stolen, unlike bonds, the stock remains the property of the registered owner, who would continue to receive the interest.

(2) The stock is issued in $100 shares, so a small investor can purchase $100 purchase who have promised me a position, and if I succeed in getting it I would not come back to St. Paul, if my coming here would interfere with the business here would interfere with the business in which I expect to engage. As to Mr. Gruber I feel the same to him as to Furey, and if he was here now would not feel like sparing him, but if he shows up after I leave the city I do not think I should go to any trouble about returning to give testimony against him. The county attorney has informed me that my return cannot be compelled, if I am not in Minnesota, and as the matter of the robbery will be practically settled by Furey's sentence I will likely not come to St. Paul again. If I do not find employment in Kansas City I will doubtless return to my home in Brooklyn, N. Y. I shall certainly leave St. Paul as soon as my money is returned to me."
