management being destrous of finding out whether a New York audience could be attracted on Sunday afternoon by an arrangement of popular prices. Those in charge of the concert profess to be more than satisfied with the results. David Bispham gave a number of baritone selections, the recital lasting for one and three-quarters hours. The selections were chiefly from Schubert, Schumann and American composers like McDowell and Walter Damrosch. Bispham was in good voice and at times received hearty and enthusiastic applause. Critics appear to agree that while some other singers may surpass Bispham in range of voice, technique and experience, few there are who possess greater powers of artistic expression. All in all, the possibilities of Sunday afternoon concerts for musical educational purposes seems to have been amply demonstrated by Mr. Bispham's recital. NEW SCHEDULE TO BE MADE

Openings Will Be in Southern Cities Where Large Crowds Can Be Attracted.

JOSEPH, Mo., March 24 -(Spe. cial.)—President Hickey, of the West-ern league, has rejected the schedule drawn up by Mr W. P. Chase, of Des Moines, for the coming baseball season, and has commenced the work of formulating a new one. It will probably be finished by the last of the week, and after receiving the sanction of the magnates will be made public. President Hickey positively refused tonight to say what changes would be made or to permit any part of it to be given out until it had been passed upon by all the club owners.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—The Washington annual meeting of the American Tract society was held today in the Gunton Temple Memorial church, the Rev. Masa S. Fiske, pastor, presiding. The Rev. Judson Swift, field secretary of New York, presented a brief report of the society's work.

Gen. O. O. Howard delivered an earnest address, setting forth the object and needs of the society. He gave from his own experience a somewhat detailed account of the tract society's work in the army, emphasizing how much good it accomplished during the recent Spanish war. He also told of what was being done in our island possessions. Gen. Heward is the society's president, and is deeply interested in its work.

The secretary's report stajed that the society was organized to diffuse a knowledge of Christ as the redeemer of sinners. In this work it has issued between 13,000,000 and 14,000,000 distinct publications at home and in the foreign field. The society through its system of colportage over 14,000,000 family visits have been made and nearly 10,000,000. President Hickey declines to give his reasons for rejecting Chase's schedule, and in reply to queries simply says that it is impracticable. Probably the most serious objection to the Chase schedule is that it so arranged the games that the railroad fare of the clubs would be far in excess of what it should be. In certain instances he has given but six games to each club in a series, whereas in the line of economy the number should be ten

Another serious objection is in the arrangement of the opening games. According to the Chase schedule they would nearly all be played in the northern cities of the league. This is not according to custom or financial ideas. The first games should be played in the south end of the circuit, where the weather is warmer and large crowds are assured. Mr. Chase had placed opening games in both St. Paul and Minneapolis, where the weather is likely to be very unfavorable for baseball when the scason

Pursuit as Remarkable for Its Diffitance Covered.

After a search that extended throughout the West Indies and to South and been, arrested and brought back to America, charged with the murder of a fellow soldier while the command was encamped at Pinar del Rio, Cuba. The tective story of fiction could equal the narrative of his pursuit and capture—a capture effected thirty thousand miles concomitants of fiction and a return to this country amid exciting incidents, says the Philadelphia Times. The two men, the detective and the culprit, raced for South Africa—the latter having twenty cavalry at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and soon proved himself an able strated that he had the confidence of his superiors and presumably deserved it. In the war with Spain Darrell made an record, and in every way showed that he was a good man and a soldier. The troop to which he belonged, with several others of the same regiment and others of other regiments was stationed at the Western Cuban town of Pinar del Río after the peace had been concluded, and there was little to do beyond the routine of drill, which was try in which the command lay.

Angelina was really a beauty. She was not merely very dark and languid as most Cuban beauties are, but there was about her a robustness of charm rarely found in the tropics, where women, and men as well, generally lack the firmness of feature and physique which prevails in the more northern countries. Darrell had unusual opportunities for meeting his sweetheart, for the girl's parents did not adhere to the old Cuban custom of keeping her secluded in a barred upper room of the house, as is the rule in most Spanish countries. In fact, there was no barred upper room in the house, for the revolutionists had burned it down long before and the family had to be content to live in a makeshift of a shed, once used for storing crude sugar, but now the only building left intact on the plan-

Thus the course of love began to flow, and it flowed on to murder. For Angelina was coquettish and vain, as most young women are, and it strained Darrell's modest purse to comply with her constant demands. His pay of a first sergeant, once ample for all his needs, now seemed to vanish almost the instant. he got it, and all of it seemed to be spent in finery for the girl. Now and again the troopers of his company would morose and that he spent more of his time in the canteen than was customary with a non-commissioned officer of his rank. Then he was much absent from his post, generally on business of the company, it was presumed, but he was sure to be on hand when roll was called. Routine of camp life in times of peace is not especially inspiring nor full of entertainment. One day is very much like another, drills being varied as the command advances in knowledge of tactics. In the company to which Darrell belonged was a young trooper named Crouch, who had enlisted with Darrell at Harrisburg, Pa. Crouch had never risen from the position of a private, for, though an earnest, faithful and reliable soldier, he lacked the ability to rise. He was, moreover, an exceedingly steady going young man, very economical in his ways, rarely at the canteen, and reputed to possess a big "roll," which latter, however, no It was due to their previous acquaint-to his death. Here is the story as the soldiers tell it. Contrary to his previous habit, which was one of strict reserve, Darrell began to cultivate the friendship of Crouch. It was known in the troop that the men had been acquainted before they went into the army and the intimacy elicited no particular comment. It is now noted, however, that this renewal of an old acquaintance coincided with the date when Darrell's finances are supposed to lave run low, under the constant demands of Angelina. Be this as it may, however, Darrell, though first sergeant, was seen much in the company of Crouch, was only a private. And occassionally the two men could be seen at a drinking place in the town, though neither was ever noticed to be under the influence

After one of these visits to the town, ly, and after taps, Darrell and Crouch return to camp. No more is known except that in the morning Crouch's dead body was found in the company street and Darrell was missing. There was much excitement in the camp and scouting parties were immediately dispatched in every direction to inter cept Darrell, and bring him back to camp, but not a trace of the man was It was now that the military authorities turned for aid to the government at Washington and pointed out the importance of capturing Darrell, who had eviescaped from Cuba and gone be yond the military jurisdiction. And Secret Service Agent W. O. Dupuy was instructed to take charge of the case and capture the culprit if possible.

Now began a pursuit as remarkable for its difficulties and niceties as for the extraordinary distances it covered. Inquiry seemed to show that after the murder seemed to show that after the murder Darrell had secured a civilian suit and, with the money taken from Crouch, about $135, had made his way to Havana by rail and unnoticed. At Havana he boarded a bark that sailed the same day for Antigua, in the Bahamas, and was actually on the seas at the very time when the authorities were still scouring the vicinity of Pinar del Rio in search of him.

It was here that fate induced Darrell to do the very thing that led to his capture. He wrote to Angelina, telling her of his departure and stating that he would make an effort to get to New would make an effort to get to New Crieans and there ship on a transport for South Africa, where he hoped to join the British arms. the British army.

Angelina all this time had been genuinely solicitous as to Darrell's safety. In the ignorance of her little Cuban soul she imagined that Darrell was now absolutely safe and told of the contents of the letter she had received from him. the letter she had received from him. This, of course, gave the authorities their clue and Agent Dupuy at once started for New Orleans, hoping that he might arrest Darrell there.

Eut for this he was too late. Darrell had shipped on one of the British army transports laden with mules and was even then on his way to South Afica. Could he be overtaken? The secret service agent sat down to figure it out and to Southampton engaged by telegraph awaited him.

That trip to Southampton was made on a fast ship, but Mr. Dupuy evidently found it slow. At all events, when he reached Southampton he figured out quickly his best way to get to South Africa, and as quickly as possible made his way over the channel and down across Europe, and at Naples made a flying connection with the steamer Herzog, of the German East African line.

This was great luck. For the Herzog happened to be several hours late in her departure, and the American detective had to get aboard as best he could. In other words his haggage was tossed aboard, and he clambered over the side when the vessel was actually getting under way. This was considered a strange proceeding by the officials of the steamer, who were at first disposed to regard Agent Dupuy with suspicion and actually intimated that they believed him to be a refugee from justice. He showed his credentials, and they read them and smclled of them and shook their heads ominously, evidently believing that credentials could be made to order too easily to be taken with too rauch faith. But when Mr. Dupuy said that he was on his way to South Africa to capture a fugitive American murderer, the German officials became openly skeptical and intimated that he was an international subject, and if he had taken any unfair advantage in boarding the ance and to the possession of this supposed "roll" of monay that Crouch came "roll" of monay that Crouch came "so in the consequences would be serious, for they knew the kaiser to well to believe he would permit anything of the kind to go unnoticed. "That makes no difference,' the driver replied, 'All you have to do is to appear on the track at any road crossing and hail the engineer.'
"Although the road cannot boast the accommodations of trunk lines," continued the speaker, "it is really a great convenience to the country through through which it passes. People down there tell me it has been kept going several years almost entirely through the eral years almost entirely through the efforts of the young manager conductor, who is hardworking, untiring and popular. He, has been busy improving the roadbed recently."

When Don Pedro Lest His Hat.

The Gentleman's Magazine.
Great efforts were made in the seventeenth century to protect the honor and dignity of foreign ambassadors in England. A proclamation was issued in 1621 by the king and lord mayor to prevent any one offering affronts by gesture or word to any foreign representative. The ny one offering affronts by gesture ord to any foreign representative. word to any foreign representative. The word to any foreign representative. The London mob were disposed to deal gently with foreigners, and an unpopular ambassador ran some risk of personal violence. There was a certain Don Pedro de Zuniga whose presence was particularly unwelcome. He was driving in his language by six mules through Holto drawn by six mules through Hol-born one day, when his hat, which had a valuable jewel in it, was snatched from his head by a man on horseback. The crowd laughed and cheered and allowed the thief to ride away.

Clarence Taylor, living at 756 South Eleventh street, Philadelphia, Pa., writes. "I write these few lines in regard to Ripans Tabules, which I have used in my family for some time, and have recommended them to all my friends. My wife was troubled with headache, and it caused her much pain and loss of appetite, for which we tried many different medicines but without any relief. I was advised to try Ripans Tabules and they worked like a charm, and they have completely cured her. These headaches caused dizziness, and almost every morning after getting up she would faint and have to go back to bed again, but, thanks to Ripans Tabules, she is cured. I have spent quite a sum of money to cure her of her fainting spells, but nothing seemed to do any good until she tried Ripans Tabules. Ten cents worth of Ripans did her more good than all the other medicines she had taken put together. We have a little boy four years old that takes them when he feels bad, but it is seldom he feels bad any more. He was raised on Mellin's Food, and after I took his bottle away from him It seemed as though I could not get anything for him that he cared to eat. It just seemed as though he had lost his appetite. I read of Ripans Tabules, and was also told by a friend to try them for his appetite, and when he had taken ten cents' worth he could eat anything I put on the table, and now he is a big, fat boy. If this testimonial is of any use to you you are at perfect liberty to use it and also my name."

There is scarcely any condition of ill health that is not benefited by the occasional use of a R.I.P.A.N.S Tabule, and the price, 10 for 5 cents, does not bar them from any home or justify any one in enduring ills that are easily cured. For sale by Druggists.
