The merchants of Jasper are busy at this time. Although we have several more business houses than last year, all report a much better business than a year ago.

Next year promises to be as lively in the way of building in Jasper as the past year has been. One carpenter alone reports having contracts for the erection of five new houses, as soon as spring is here.

"It is astonishing how much flour is sold in this town," remarked one farmer to another on the streets the other day. "There is some farmer's wagon with two or three hundred pounds of flour in it now." The speaker is right. It is astonishing at the amount of that important article which is handled in Jasper. We are keeping our excellent mill running at its full capacity and flour is being shipped in from other places by the carload.

Thomas Brackett Reed.

There can be no question about the place which Thomas Brackett Reed will occupy in American history. He will stand, for generations to come, among the great statesmen of the land, and his fame will be in no wise modified or diminished by his alienation in the closing years of his life from his party.

It is morally certain that a grievous and corroding disappointment died with Thomas B. Reed. There is a sort of mournful parallel between the ending of his high career and that of Blaine. This is made all the more remarkable and interesting by the fact that both men were from Maine and cherished a common ambition.

Each failed to reach the high goal to which he aspired, and each found the end of life's journey overshadowed with clouds and strewn with thorns.

It should not be difficult to comprehend the bitterness which it would cost a man like Reed to witness the rise of a man like McKinley. It added wormwood to the cup which was pressed to the lips of Reed to see the people fascinated by qualities in his political rival for which he himself could entertain no admiration or sympathy. Reed abundantly earned the title of "Czar of the House." He was positive and imperious; McKinley was courteous and conciliatory; Reed was not diplomatic in the assertion of his opinions and policies. McKinley sought the way and means of accomplishing his ends which caused the least possible offense to the men who were influential in shaping the destinies of the Republican party. If McKinley was wise and judicious, Reed was aggressive and fearless.

But the people were won to the support of McKinley by his great personal urbanity and by a talent for not exciting opposition, which is exceedingly rare in men who wield the influence in national affairs which McKinley exerted. These contrasted characteristics did not help Thomas B. Reed to bear his bitter disappointment with composure or patience. He made no effort to conceal the chagrin and resentment which took possession of his soul after the end of his great dream; but that, also, was only a manifestation of the genuine human nature which he exemplified in his whole career. It may be said that he died before his time, as he was only 63 but after a man has lost, or failed to gain, what is most precious and desirable in life, existence, aside from the mere instinct of loving the "warm precincts of the cheerful days," is really nothing to lay great store by.

The episode which embittered the last years of his life afforded only one more example of the power of ambition and the thirst for honor to mock and cheat those who entertain these treacherous guests in their breasts. The great ex-Speaker was no less of a man nor will his fame be in any wise dimmed or marred because he permitted himself to be unhappy and morbid over an affair which touched the most vital point in his strong and sincere nature.—K. C. Star.

Everything is in the name when it comes to Witch Hazel Salve. E. C. DeWitt & Co. of Chicago discovered, some years ago, how to make a salve from Witch Hazel that is a specific for Piles. For Bleeding, itching and protruding Piles, eczema, cuts, burns, bruises and all skin diseases DeWitt's Salve has no equal. This has given rise to numerous worthless counterfeits. Ask for DeWitt's—the genuine at E. I. Lauderbaugh.

Current Comment

It will be news to the public generally that such a state of affairs prevails in Indianapolis as represented in a recent dispatch of great length published in a St. Louis paper and dated Indianapolis. In Indianapolis, says the dispatch, "a man may now attire himself in a rented dress suit, slip a rented diamond ring on his finger, rent a carriage, drive to a rented house, fitted with furniture that was rented with it, eat from rented dishes, listen to music from a rented piano concealed behind rented palms, and admire rented curios. And at the same time he may fondly believe that he is the only one practicing the rental deceit. This alleged revelation of the hollowness and artificiality of Indianapolis social life, let us hope, is exaggerated, and that the gaiety that distinguishes all the circles of society in Indianapolis is not founded on such a precarious and perilous basis as the correspondent would have us believe. At any rate, such a means of sustaining a fine appearance must lead to exposure in time, for the rented curios and the rented furniture will eventually be recognized. It would certainly be unpleasant to have one's guests remember where the brass nail was out of the leather fauteuil, or recall the onyx table with a loose caster. There are already palms that are recognized as old friends, which are spoken of familiarly by those who remember them, the guests congratulating each other on the fact that the "dear old thing is putting forth a fresh frond since we saw it at Mrs. Blank's last Tuesday." If the furniture is going to make one-night stands, together with the florist's treasures, it, too, will soon have that jaded, dejected appearance of the society palm in the height of the season. The rented dress suit in any but a great metropolis is always in terror, or its wearer is, because of the imminent recognition of its characteristic buttonholes or the individualistic droop of its tails, and the way it flares out at the collar will never be forgotten or forgiven by those who associated with it intimately on former occasions. If there is a mania for the rented adjuncts of the evening function at Indianapolis, which we very much doubt, it will in time wear away. It will fall of its own weight and perish of its own folly.

The uses of photography are constantly extending. A western railroad now uses it as a substitute for written reports on construction work. For example, the Fish! Fish! Office St. Joseph, Mo., Nov. 6, 1902. All persons in the State of Missouri desiring young croppie or black bass, for ponds, lakes, or streams, should apply at their earliest convenience to Phil Kopplin, Jr., Superintendent Forest Park Hatchery, Forest Park, St. Louis, Mo., or to M. E. O'Brien, Superintendent St. Joseph Hatchery, the one most accessible to the applicant. The only expense to the applicant will be the cost of can (75 cents), which must be sent in advance, the express charges to be paid C. O. D. A five gallon can will carry thirty to fifty small fish. All applications will be notified in advance of shipment. If more than one is desired remit accordingly. F. P. YENAWINE, President.

progress of the work of changing a grade crossing or building a bridge is photographed at stated periods, and the photographs are preserved both as a record and as illustrations of method. Pictures are also taken of all the resources of the road in the way of material, and of every mile of track, showing curves, grades, switches and crossings. A complete set of photographs is used, too, to illustrate the book of rules which is placed in the hands of every railroad man. This enables the men to refresh their memories by reference to the view of any particular point of road, and makes them more readily interchangeable from one division to another. The book of rules also contains photographs of trains in more than 100 combinations of circumstances, and the text informs the trainmen what to do in each case.

In Germany a discussion has started urging that German children drop the words "mamma" and "papa" in favor of "mutter" (mother) and "vater" (father).

"How," say they, "can anybody prefer the unmeaning 'mamma' to the deep and impressive 'mutter'?" Nothing can replace for a German the word "mutter," certainly not the French "mamma." A certain philologist, however, asks how it can be suggested that the word "mamma" is derived from the French, seeing that it is probably to be found in all languages of the world. In the numerous dialects of Africa and in India the word for mother is "mamma," which is given as a title of honor to every elderly dame deserving of esteem and respect. "Mamma" and "papa" (baba) are so generally used in all parts of the world that they probably date back some thousands of years.

That Wisconsin judge who decided that Sunday shaves were unnecessary has done much to promote the use of memory tests by the young man on Saturday evenings before his Sunday visits to his best girl.

Those Detroit girls who have resolved not to marry anyone who does not belong to the union will probably accept an amendment in favor of good-looking young men who are trying to form a union.
