CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS AS WARRIORS

Disciples of Mrs. Eddy Have Efficient War Organization and are Victors in the Field of Righteousness

(Excerpt from the New York Tribune)

"Saving the world, one heart at a time"...the phrase is simple, yet profound. In the face of war, these Christian Scientists, disciples of Mrs. Eddy, feel empowered to act. Their organization, built on the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy, is characterized by its commitment to spiritual healing and its rejection of material solutions.

Their approach to war is rooted in the understanding that the true battle is within the human heart. They believe that by overcoming fear and hate, they can create a world at peace. Their actions are not meant to replace worldly forces but to complement them, offering a spiritual perspective.

While they may not be visible on the battlefield, the Christian Scientists are engaged in a different kind of warfare, fighting against the spiritual forces that feed war and violence. Their efforts are aimed at instilling a sense of peace and understanding in the minds and hearts of humanity. They do this through educational campaigns, community service, and personal conversions.

One of their most notable successes was seen in the United States, where they organized a chain of hospitals and clinics staffed by Christian Scientists. These hospitals provided care to soldiers at no cost, emphasizing the spiritual aspects of healing and recovery. The Christian Scientists believed that through spiritual practice, the physical and emotional wounds of war could be healed.

Their impact is not limited to the United States. Christian Scientists have worked in Europe, Asia, and Africa, establishing hospitals and clinics, and providing spiritual support to those affected by war. They have also been active in aid and relief efforts, offering a spiritual perspective to those in need.

The Christian Scientists' approach to war is one of non-violence and peace. They believe that true victory lies in overcoming the forces of darkness and replacing them with the light of Divine Truth. This is their mission, and they continue to work towards this goal, even in times of conflict.

In the end, the victory of the Christian Scientists is not measured in physical terms, but in the hearts and minds of those they touch. They are the warriors of peace, fighting a battle that is invisible but nonetheless powerful.
