Madam C. J. Walker Sells Her Hair Grower so Widely that She is Able to Give Indianapolis Y. M. C. A. a Thousand Dollars

THE WALKER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, INC.

The Freeman of Indianapolis of recent date says:

Few, very few persons in this city, have an adequate idea of the bulk and volume of business done by the Walker Manufacturing Company, now located at 640 North West street. Coming to Indianapolis about one year ago, Madam C. J. Walker purchased a home on North West street, and immediately set about putting her wonderful preparation upon the market. Her bid at that time being for the local trade, for through a well-planned system of advertisements her preparation was already well known in all parts of the Union.

Madam Walker met with some opposition in the form of doubt and indifference, but being a woman with a strong and determined will, she kept her preparation before the public, and soon the demand became so great that she had to seek larger where she continued her business at 2310 Champa street. She remained in Denver a year. She became awakened to the needs of the colored people in this line and her discovery was regarded as one of the wonders of the world. As she had not thoroughly convinced the skeptical public in so short a time she decided to travel, notwithstanding she was discouraged by her husband and many patrons who said she would not be able to make her expenses from one town to another. However, she was determined and felt inspired to do so. Believing, as Christ converted the world by miracles He wrought before the Jews, by placing her hand in His, she might convert the world by the wonderful good she would do her people. Hence on September 15, 1906, she started out, accompanied by her husband, to place her goods on the market; he having decided to join heart and hand with her to make her work a success, notwithstanding he could see nothing ahead but failure.

Madam Walker

quarters; to meet this demand she had erected a large factory in the rear of her beautiful home on North West street. This factory does a rushing business, both local and foreign. Madam Walker, as president of the corporation, contents herself with acting in a supervisory capacity, the immediate management being under a forewoman, an estimable and competent lady from Springfield, Ill. There are several girls employed, also bookkeeper and stenographer.

It is a treat to visit her laboratory, see the girls at work, talk with Madam Walker, and get an idea of

After a few months on the road, he became thoroughly convinced that her method was the right one. They traveled for a year and a half. At the end of that time, the mail order business had so increased, that it was necessary for them to settle somewhere temporarily, so Pittsburg, Pa., was selected for that purpose. After establishing a business there, she left her daughter in charge of the business there and began traveling again. February 10, 1910, she came to Indianapolis, Ind., and was so impressed with the city and the cordial welcome extended to her she her business. Madam Walker is now making arrangements to send agents to all parts of the country. Numerous applications are in and are now under consideration. Indianapolis feels proud of this business woman, as well as of the opportunity for employment this corporation offers to her boys and girls, and this city is proud of her for yet another reason, proud of her great, big, generous and race-loving heart, as attested by her gift of one thousand dollars to the Colored Y. M. C. A. building fund.

In 1905 she discovered a remedy for the growing of hair. After having tried it successfully on herself and family, she decided to make a business of it. July 19, 1905, she left St. Louis, Mo., for Denver, Colo., to engage in the hair growing business. After many discouragements and obstacles she finally was able to convince the people at this place that she could really grow hair, and was successful in building up a fair business. January 3, 1906, she was married to C. J. Walker. After her marriage, she moved from an attic room, which she had been occupying, to more comfortable furnished rooms,
