As the car crashed into the store, the stranger nimbly jumped out and in the excitement darted through the crowd and disappeared.

LESSONS BARREL FROM FLAMES, SAVING MANY.

RUSWELL, N. M., Dec. 1.—During the burning of the Star bakery at Clovis spectators witnessed an act of typical western heroism, and through the nerve of a cowboy, Charles Marritt, scores of lives were saved. The fire was beyond control before discovered. When the fire was hottest a barrel of gasoline was noticed standing upright near the rear of the burning building. STARVED FOR SIX DAYS.

$50,000,000 YEARLY LOSS TO RAILROADS ON FUEL.

CHICAGO, Dec. 1.—American railroads lose $50,000,000 worth of fuel a year and consume $200,000,000 worth of coal to obtain $80,000,000 worth of efficiency, a further waste of $120,000,000 worth of fuel power, according to figures prepared by Chief Engineer L. C. Fitch, of the Chicago Great Western railroad. That road conducted an investigation as a result of the charges of Louis J. Brandeis that railroads waste $1,000,000 a day through inefficient service.

The remedy suggested is a fuel bureau of experts, improved firing devices on locomotives, a school for firemen, more scientific ordering of locomotives for service and closer watch on exposed coal yards.

THE PROFESSOR'S MYSTERY

By Wells Hastings and Brian Hooker. Copyright, 1911, The Bobbe-Merrill Company. (Continued From Wednesday.) Dr. Paulus smiled very gravely. "That busy mind of Mr. Crosby has before been useful," he said. "What is this idea, then?" "It sounds pretty wild and theatrical," said I, "but couldn't we reach the root of the trouble by making the cure come from the same source? We might tell her forever that her ideas were false and harmful, and she'd only feel that we were profane. But if the medium herself denied them—these visions and voices must be at least partly a fake. Now, if we can persuade or force her to show Mrs. Tabor how it's done—and I think I know how to exert pressure upon her—then might not the illusion be dispelled once for all? I mean, whether Mrs. Mahl is a fake or not, can't she be made to undo the work she has done, and discredit the dangerous belief she has taught?" Mr. Tabor was leaning forward in his chair as I finished. Reid was walking the floor again and shrugging his shoulders; and Lady was looking at me with eyes of absolute belief. "Fake?" asked Dr. Paulus unexpectedly. "Sham, trick, fraud," I explained, and he nodded, frowning. "Oh, but this whole thing's absurd," Reid put in. "Crosby's a good fellow and clever, and all that, but he's a layman and this is a complicated problem. It's all one if after another, if the woman's willing to expose herself, and if she does it well, and if other people believe her, and if all this would have anything to do with the case. Besides it would be a shock, a violent shock, a dangerous shock. No sense at all in it. Melodrama isn't medicine. "I am not so sure," said Doctor Paulus. "It is unusual and what you call theatrical, but my work is unusual and many times theatrical also. I have need to act much of the time with my patients. With the individual mind one must use each time an individual cure. This at least strikes at the cause of the trouble, and might succeed. With your permission, Mr. Tabor, we will try it. "But her heart, man, her heart," objected Reid, "what about her heart and the shock?" "Well, we can dare, I think, to risk that. Every operation is a risk that we judge wise to take, and this is a malignant mischief to be extirpated. There will be no unreasonable danger. "If we can somehow get this medium out here—" said Mr. Tabor. "That I shall manage to bring her tomorrow afternoon, telling her perhaps of a private sitting in the interest of science. I am not often so much away, but this case is of importance." He rose and looked at his watch. "Is not that the motorcar now at the door?" On the step he turned to me with his quizzical smile. "It is perhaps well for us all to have your mind stimulated, Mr. Crosby. That is a beautiful and intelligent young lady." He looked abruptly from me to the midnight sky. "It appears, if I do not mistake, that we shall have rain," he chirped. "Good-night," and he stepped gravely into the limousine and closed the door with a slam. CHAPTER XXV. Fighting with Shadows. The morning came dark and stormy, with a September gale driving in from the south, and the trees lashing and tossing gustily through gray slants of rain. It was so dark that until nearly noon we kept the lights burning, and through the unnatural morning we sat about listlessly, unwilling to talk about the impending crisis and unable to talk long of anything else for the unspoken weight of it upon our minds. Mrs. Tabor kept her room, with Sheila and most of the time Lady busy with her. She seemed hardly to remember the night before, save as a vague shock, and physically she was less weakened by it than might have been expected, but her mind wavered continually, and she confused with her hallucination of Miriam the identity of those about her. The rest of us talked and read by snatches, and stared restlessly out of the rain-drenched windows. Mr. Tabor and I began a game of chess. It was well on in the afternoon when the automobile came in sight, swishing through the sudden grayness with curtains drawn and hood and runningsplashed with clinging clots of clay. None of us knew who saw it first; only that we three men were at the door together encouraging one another with our eyes. The medium greeted us with a gush of caressing politeness, glancing covertly among us as she removed her wraps, and bracing herself visibly beneath her unconscious. It was she who made the first move, after Dr. Paulus had introduced us and we were seated in Mr. Tabor's study behind closed doors. "Mr. Crosby is the gentleman who turned the light on me last evening," she said. "I wish I could express the undulating rise and fall of her infection. It was almost as if she sang the words, 'Of course with him present I would not be willing to do anything. It was very painful, besides the risk, a dreadful shock like that.' " "I shall not be in the room," I answered, "and I'm sorry to have caused you any discomfort, Mrs. Mahl. We needed the light, I thought." "Oh, it wasn't the pain," she smiled with lifted eyes. "We grow so used to it that we don't consider suffering. It was very dangerous, waking one out of control suddenly. You might have killed me, but, of course, you weren't aware." She turned to Doctor Paulus: "You understand, Doctor, how it is, how it strains the vitality. The gentleman didn't realize." (To Be Continued Tomorrow.)
