

BETTER THAN THE GOLDEN RULE.

Never Allow Any One to Do More For You Than You Do For Them.

Contributed.

About twenty-five years ago there lived a man near me who was very poor, yet he and his family of wife and three children seemed to be perfectly happy and contented. Their poverty did not keep them from being happy and cheerful. You would not on meeting this man on the street or highway learn or see that he was taking life so happily. You would have to have business with him or work with him to learn that he possessed that which some men are said to have with more kingdoms—contentment.

You would not think that a man without any worldly possessions and living in a log cabin would be very contented. I did not learn the secret of this man's happiness and contentment until he was preparing to move away into another country. "Never allow any one to do more for you than you do for them." These words were spoken by one of the children while he was getting two chickens to take to a boy who had given him one. I got interested. "Is that the way you always do?" "Yes," said he, "I say that it is better than the Golden Rule."

I began to think about the life of this man in the two years that I had known him. On reflection I saw that he had lived up to his ideal of life of doing more for others than they had done for him. He had done this by speaking kindly of you, by acts of kindness in time of sickness or need, by deeds and service of money value. In his straitened circumstances he had not done anything to attract the attention of men but the idea of the duty of man to place the world in debt to him impressed itself upon me and I shall never forget it.

There was something good about this man and the city that his circumstances in life were such that his fellow-men were not bettered more by his having lived. However, we have learned a great lesson that all of us can put in practice, that is by putting your fellow-men and the world in debt to you by your acts and deeds and by doing more in every way for your immediate associates than they do for you. Try this and be contented and happy.

What to Teach Your Girl.

Exchange, Home Circle Department.

Teach her that 100 cents make a dollar.

Teach her to arrange the parlor and library.

Teach her to say "No" and mean it or "Yes," and stick to it.

Teach her how to wear a calico dress and to wear it like a queen.

Teach her how to sew on buttons, darn stockings and mend gloves.

Teach her to dress for health and comfort as well as appearance.

Teach her to cultivate flowers and to keep the kitchen garden.

Teach her to make the neatest room in the house.

Teach her to have nothing to do with intemperate or dissolute young men.

Teach her that tight lacing is unbecomely, as well as injurious to health.

Teach her to regard the morals and habits, and not money, in selecting her associates.

Teach her to observe the old rule: "A place for everything and everything in its place."

Teach her that music, drawing and painting are real accomplishments in the home, and are not to be neglected if there be time and money for them.

Teach her the important truism: "That the more she lives within her income the more she will save and the further she will get away from the poor-house."

Teach her that a good, steady, church-going, mechanic, farmer, clerk, or teacher without a cent, is worth more than forty loafers or non-producers in broadcloth.

Attend to Your Own Business.

Fairbrother's Everything.

The man who gets into his head just right that he should attend to his own business and not worry so much about the other folks, will live equally as long, die fully as happy, and possibly have a little better time going through the so-called "vale of tears."

There are people who have nothing else to do but criticize the clothes worn by their neighbors; people who gossip about other folks and forget that their own back yard is full of tin cans and dead cats; people who want to reform the whole universe and who need reforming first themselves.

The world is all right—some of the paths are a little rough, some of the hills are a little steep—but if you attend to your own business and let the other fellow attend to his, unless you are invited in either as a friend or on a salary, there will not be so many discordant notes in your life.

As long as a man leaves you alone, leave him alone.

Teach Them The Laws of Health.

Says an exchange very aptly:

We teach children grammar that they may know how to speak correctly; arithmetic that they may know how to calculate correctly in their business transactions; but more important to them than either is a knowledge of the laws of life and health, that they may know how to avoid disease, and, in short, live correctly. This knowledge does not come by instinct more than a knowledge of grammar does.

We do not care what may be the price of cotton or tobacco or any other crop which may be sold to be of any service to its producer, we still insist that no man can have the greatest possible amount of success as a farmer who does not first and foremost provide himself with all his own needs from his own farm, as he can and then devote his secondary and not his primary attention to a crop which is for sale and useful only when sold.—Greensboro News.

When a cold becomes settled in the system, it will take several days' treatment to cure it, and the best remedy to use is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It will cure quicker than any other, and also leaves the system in a natural and healthy condition. Sold by all dealers.

You Must Read This If You Want the Benefit.

J. W. Greer, Greenwood, La., suffered with a severe case of rheumatism. "The pains were so intense as I was forced to hypodermic injections for relief. These attacks started with a pain in the small of my back which gradually became fairly paralyzing. My attention was attracted to Foley's Kidney Pills and I am glad to say after using this wonderful medicine I am no longer bothered by my old enemy rheumatism. Sold by all dealers."

Prize Corn Yields.

The announcement recently that a boy in North Carolina has established a record of 228 bushels of corn on an acre of ground recalls some records that have been made in Southern States before this time. This boy's record comes into the second place, being only one bushel less than that reported from Bennettsville, S. C., several years ago when 236 bushels was produced from a single acre, and the next largest was at Garner, N. C., where 226½ bushels were made on a single acre in 1909 by J. P. Batta.

James Wilson, secretary of agriculture, on the best and wisest men in the public life of the nation, gave diplomas of agriculture last fall to four Southern boys for yields of corn, as follows: South Carolina, 152½ bushels; Mississippi, 147 bushels; North Carolina 135 bushels, and Virginia, 122 bushels on a single acre.

From a number of experiments conducted by Dr. S. A. Knapp, chief of the farmers' co-operative demonstration work of the department of agriculture, last year, it was established that the average yield of corn on experimental fields in the South ranged from 70 to 125 bushels per acre.

Banks On Sure Thing Now.

"I'll never be without Dr. King's New Life Pills again," writes A. Schingee, 647 Elm St., Buffalo, N. Y. "They cured me of chronic constipation when all others failed. I'm equalized for Bilelessness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Headache, Chills, Malaria and Debility. I'm at Melville House."

Norfolk a North Carolina City Anyway.

Wilmington Star.

Said the Norfolk Landmark of Friday, the day after the Thanksgiving Day football game between the V. P. I.'s and the North Carolina A. & M.:

Norfolk was a bigger North Carolina city last night than anything that the Tar Heel State has boasted of." Well, North Carolina loves to boast of Norfolk, for Norfolk is really a North Carolina city in most every particular except its geographical position. We may decide some of these days to annex Norfolk and scoop back all of those "Down Homers" who strayed over there and have been doing things.

The old, old story, told times without number, repeated over and over again for the last 36 years, but it is always a welcome story to those in search of health—There is nothing the world that cures coughs and colds as quickly as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Sold by all dealers.

THE BOY A POTENTIALITY.

A Man in The Cocoon, Big, With Many Possibilities, You Do Not Know What He Is Going to Become.

Elbert Hubbard.

I have a profound respect for boys. Grimsy, ragged, tousled boys in the street often attract me strangely. A boy is a man in the cocoon—you do not know what he is going to become—his life is big with many possibilities. He may make or unmake kings, change boundaries—lines between States, write books that will mould characters, or invent machines that will revolutionize the commerce of the world.

Wouldn't you like to turn time backward, and see Abraham Lincoln at twelve, when he had never worn a pair of boots? The lank, lean, yellow, hungry boy, hungry for love, hungry for learning, tramping off to school, the boy for twenty miles to borrow a book, and spelling it out, crouched before the glare of the burning logs!

Then there was that Corsican boy, one of the goodly brood who weighed only fifty pounds when ten years old; who was thin and pale and perverse, and had tantrums, and had to be sent suppers to bed, or locked in a dark closet because he wouldn't "mind!" Who would have thought that he would have mastered every phase of warfare at twenty-six; and when told that the exchequer of France was in dire confusion, would say, "the finances? I will arrange them!"

Yesterday I rode on horseback past a field where a boy was ploughing. The lad's hair stuck out through his hat; his form was bony and awkward; one suspender held his trousers in place; his bare legs and arms were brown and sunburned, and as I passed by, and from under the flapping brim of his hat he cast a quick glance out of dark, half-bashful eyes and modestly returned my salute. His back turned, I took off my hat and sent a God-bless-you down the furrow after him.

Who knows? I may go to that boy to borrow money yet, or to hear him preach, or to beg him to defend me in a lawsuit; or he may stand with pulse unshaken, bare of arm, in white apron, ready to do his duty, while the cone is placed over his face, and Night and Death come creeping into my veins.

Be patient with the boys; you are dealing with soul-stuff.

The Telephone as a Teacher.

Raleigh Christian Advocate.

Have you ever stopped to think that the telephone may be something more than a commercial or social factor in your life? Has it ever dawned upon you that it may be a great teacher in morals?

For example, while you are sitting quietly at ease, or with your mind concentrated on some vexing problem, there comes a ring which combines the urgency of a fire-bell and the whirling debauch note of a siren when it is about to sting. Your first impulse is to throw something at the receiver. Every nerve cries out, "Smash the thing!" But, hold. You have it in your power to give those nerves such a discipline as will make them as gentle as an old family horse the next time a provocation of any kind may arise. To throw something at the receiver, or go to it with a frown on your face, will serve only to make those nerves run away with you, surely, next time.

You may go to the receiver, and the only message you receive is the statement that they are only "trying the line." Now, do not abuse the one who is trying the line for unnecessarily disturbing you, but speak a gentle word, and remember that not only is the "line" "being tried," but that your moral strength is being tested.

Tomorrow, something may come up to vex you, but you will be calmer from the telephone that the vexing thing is only to try the line which connects you with good morals.

It may be that when you go to the receiver and answer gently the stringent question, "Who's that," the only reply is that of deadest of all silences—the silence of a "cut-off." The wrong number has been called. There was not even a "thank you," and you long to teach that person some politeness. But forget it. It will do you more good to pity such colossal ingratitude and to study the meaning of the third and fourth verses of the fifth chapter of Romans than to hurl obstructions at hard-headed, ungrateful individuals.

In other words, the telephone is a factor which often is not so wonderful in the domain of science as potential in the domain of morals. It may make or mar your character.

"Thus endeth the chapter."

Was Miss Holman Misquoted.

Charlotte Observer.

There naturally arises the question whether Miss Lydia Holman, the trained nurse who has been quoted as misrepresenting the mountain people so grossly, has been correctly reported. In the current issue of The Uplift we find the belief expressed that she has not.

In a recital of her experiences to the editor of this paper, it is said, "Miss Holman never once uttered a severe criticism of the people—she did not picture the conditions as once upon a time a notorious liar did about a people in the very best and most advanced section of the State. Miss Holman impressed upon me that her heart was in her work and that in this section she found much to do, and we noted how free her remarks were of a suggestion of anything harrowing other than that the people lived close to nature's heart and followed closely a simple life."

But as largely inviolable this conviction we note that the original report of Miss Holman's address appeared as a local story in the Philadelphia North American, a thoroughly reputable and careful newspaper, and that no denial from Miss Holman herself has been heard yet. I have seen some people who will talk very differently upon such subjects in North Carolina and in Pennsylvania. It looks as if Miss Holman is one of these.

A Simple Safeguard for Mothers.

Mrs. D. Gilkinson, 326 Ingles Ave., Youngstown, Ohio, gained wisdom by experience.

"My little girl had a severe cold and coughed almost continuously. My sister recommended Foley's Honey and Tar. The first dose I gave her relieved the inflammation in her throat and after using only one bottle her throat and lungs were entirely free from inflammation. Since then I always keep a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar in the house. Accept no substitutes. Sold by all druggists."
