The Scenario Lover

By WILLIAM FALL

(© 1911, Western Newspaper Union.)

As Jack crossed the office on his way to his desk, his eyes dwelt tenderly on Madge's nimble fingers as they traced what he felt sure was a note to him. Thinking to surprise her, he drew nearer, and suddenly the large writing on the sheet seemed to rise up and assail his eyes. With hurt horror he read:

"Dearest Ted: Of course I love you. Why doubt me? As long as I live, I'm yours."

He waited to read no further, but fled to the stockroom, where hidden behind the bales and boxes, he fought out his trouble and decided upon a course of action.

"My little Madge, whom I trusted with my whole soul," he groaned. Her falseness seemed impossible.

Who this fellow Ted was he did not know. It was enough that the girl he loved, and who had promised to marry him, was writing such a letter to another man.

At last he clenched his hands, and setting his teeth, went into the private office of the manager. Six weeks ago, he had been offered a position on the road, one that would pay him a much better salary, and had refused, not wanting to leave Madge. Now he was glad to go, and immediately, too. Within two hours of his reading the beginning of that fateful note, he was on the train to take up the work of one of the commercial travelers who had suddenly been taken sick.

Jack did not stop to say good-by to Madge, nor did he write her, for he felt that the less said the better.

"Perhaps if I get away this hurt will stop," he told himself, but although he kept busy and in his labors turned night into day, sending back so much business that the firm believed they had secured the model salesman, he could not forget Madge or her thousand and one appealing ways. It was all the harder because she kept on writing to him, in the same clear, flowing hand that had penned the fateful confession of her love for another, begging him to let her know the reason for his continued silence.

Tom, his chum, wrote him that Madge looked ill.

Things looked black to him, although he had made such a success in a business way that the office sent for him to come home and make a contract with the firm, and although he would have rather remained away forever, Jack obeyed, and once more found himself in the same city with Madge.

Being a salesman now, he managed to have his interview with the manager without going out among his old associates, and so avoided Madge although a sight of her sunny hair through the open doorway turned him sick at heart.

His business outlook was extremely bright, much better than he had dared to dream of for years to come, and yet it was a very heavy heart that he carried with him into the little motion picture theater, where he sought a few moments of relaxation later on in the evening.

Wearily he made his way to the corner seat in the box where they had always sat.

Listlessly he followed the story of the film. There was the usual quarrel between two loves, although he reflected bitterly that neither had his cause. Suddenly he straightened up. The lover received a letter from the girl with whom he had quarreled, and it was photographed on the film.

"Dearest Ted: Of course I love you. Why doubt me? As long as I live, I'm yours."

As on a former occasion, Jack stopped to read no further. He recognized the clear, flowing hand. It was Madge's penmanship, that he knew, but he also understood that it was never written to a living person. The thought flamed through him that there must be some heart-healing explanation. Realizing how his cruelty must have hurt her, he turned to leave, when in the seat by his side where she had sat so often was—Madge.

Instinctively his hand reached for hers, and in the tender pressure given and returned everything was forgotten and forgiven.

"I saw you here," she whispered, "and came here to sit by you."

"Darling! How, though, did they get that letter? I saw you write it," he confessed, "though not intentionally."

"I wrote the scenario of the photograph," she said with proper pride. They forgot the audience, sitting there together again in the happiness of their love, and he bent over and whispered:

"We'll be married tomorrow so you can go out on the road with me." Madge nodded happily. "Of course, for as long as I live, I'm yours," she murmured, and this time the words carried a joyous message to him.

But Sleeves Were Handy. Handkerchiefs were unknown before the early part of the sixteenth century.

First Woman Journalist.
Mrs. Anne Royall, born in Maryland, in 1780, was not only the first woman journalist, but the first of her sex to own and edit a newspaper. She was the widow of a Virginia revolutionary war officer, and appeared in Washington in 1824 for the purpose of trying to secure a government pension. Failing in this, she started a small weekly sheet which was first called the "Washington Paul Pry" and later the "Huntress." She had met personally and talked with every president from Washington to Lincoln, and was the terror of politicians.

Iron Pipe Makes Good Sprinkler.
Somebody attached to the Arroyo Seco library and playgrounds in Los Angeles had a bright idea. In order to sprinkle the rose hedges and vines in the grounds with little trouble, a three-fourths-inch pipe was perforated at intervals and placed on top of the fence. The pipe was then given water connection; and now, when the water is turned on, the entire hedge and border of flowers is sprinkled. Another length of perforated pipe takes care of the library terrace.—Populus Science Monthly.

Seeing Him Home.

I was coming home from a dance, and I didn't want my escort, whom I had just met that evening, to know where I resided. We were walking down the street and I saw a pretty house. I stopped in front of this house and told my escort that I lived there and was obliged for his attention and kindness in taking me home. A look of bewilderment broke out on his face as he said, "Holy smoke, how do you live there when I live there?"—Exchange.

Man of Esprit.

There are men of esprit who are excessively exhausting to some people. They are the talkers who have what may be called jerky minds. Their thoughts do not run in the natural order of sequence. They say bright things on all possible subjects, but their zigzags rack you to death. After a jolting half hour with one of these jerky companions, talking with a dull friend affords relief. It is like taking the cat in your lap after holding a squirrel.—O. W. Holmes.

Social Worm Turns.

An English paper inveighs against hosts and hostesses who look upon their guests as temporary chattels—creatures to be disposed of at will, amused, fed, exercised and finally berthed to bed, entirely without reference to their own desires. Few of those victims have the courage of Lady Georgina Grey, who on being told by her host, as he bade her good-night: "We breakfast at nine," replied: "Oh, do you? I breakfast at eleven."—Boston Transcript.

The Dreadnaught

An Allsteel 4 Drawer Letter File That Sells for $35.00

and the low price does not mean an interior cabinet, in fact, before this filing cabinet was put on the market it was thoroughly tested and proved worthy of its name

"The Dreadnaught"

It is indeed a rare occasion when we write an advertisement of Allsteel Office Furniture that we do not have to restrain ourselves from writing about the organization back of the line rather than the products themselves. When you once get out to Youngstown and mingle with those "Good Fellows" you realize almost instantly why "Allsteel belongs with success."

Roanoke Rapids and Rosemary are Allsteel towns - if you don't believe it read the labels on the steel Safes, Desks and Filing Cabinets you see hereabouts and while the steel shelving is not labeled - its Allsteel just the same.

The Allsteel line is built for the small as well as the large business.
