This action was finally accomplished, though there were many protests from aldermen whose virtuous indignation over public sentiment would have been One of the aldermen comand had reflected upon them severely in connection with responsibility for the murder. It is a little remarkable that officials who have never asserted in their acts any higher duty than the protection of the bummer element should so suddenly appear desirous of abandoning the associates who gave them official power and should attempt to pose before the public as the exemplication of morality and decency. One of the aldermen held that the funeral remarks of Rev. Mr. Chase should make every citizen blush. Among other things more or less pointed we find that Mr. Chase said in his funeral oration:

I charge it upon this county that these nfluences of vice and crime have so gained control and so held control, unless to-day by this death that control is shattered, that there has been no such sense of moral responsibility resting upon the officers, that vice has gone unpunished, that iniquity has lifted its brazen standard, that it has uplifted its shameless countenance and stalked through the streets of our city. I say these trials that we have been carrying on our very city officers, instead of turn ing their influence to assist in the purification of the city and the enforcement of the law, have stood as obstructions in the way of the work that was to be accomplished.

This is a condition of affairs well calculated to call a blush to the cheek Garden City, Kansas, offers the first of a citizen. It is not to be wondered at volunteer company for the possible that the alderman experienced the
