Real Elephants Perform Tricks in Circus Act

The aim of the Columbia theater in its program announced for the first half of next week beginning Sunday, is variety and a gorgeous appeal to all kinds of theater goers. Amusement seekers ought to find something they will like in a program as varied as this one. There will be John Robinson's military elephants, considered the greatest pachyderm act under roof or canvas, in America or Europe, Asia or Africa today. The great beasts have been taught some of the most unbelievable tricks and they perform in a manner entirely different from the crudely trained circus elephant. The older folks will be keenly interested in the various performances of these beasts while the children will view them with the sharpest delight. Harris and Greene and Katherine Parker appear in a comedy sketch, "At the Depot" written by James J. Morton, the greatest of present day monologists and entertainers. Douglas Graves and Georgia Edwards will be here in "Meet the Wife," a comedy conceived and fashioned solely for comedy purposes. Jack Lavier, the flying monologist, in his newest offering, "All in the Spirit of Jest" is to be another of the better known acts to play the Columbia. Kate and Wiley will entertain with harmony of grace and feats of strength and dexterity. The Kuehn girls will present "Bits of Vaudeville."

The bill for the last half of the week will be headed by "Color Gems," a beautiful posing act showing something new and striking in color and lighting effects. Homer Miles & Co., will appear in a dramatic sketch, "The Roughneck." Mr. Miles has the role of an Irishman and he is able to do some clever chacteristic bist. May and Hill in a comedy dialogue entitled "Stolen Kisses," Lockwood and Rush as "The Old Bats," Steve Freda and his snapping turtle guitar in a melange of mirth, melody and music and the dancing Humphreys in a whirlwind comedy dancing novelty will complete the bill.

All Feature Show Opens at Palace in Moline Sunday

Manager Scharnberg announces an all-feature bill at the Palace four days, starting Sunday matinee; six acts of Orpheum vaudeville, each a feature in itself, which promises to be the best show so far this season. Color Gems is a posing act, consisting of two men and four women, who present what they call "A Study in Color, Light and Form." It is said to be the par excellence posing act of today. Color Gems blends in natural colors of spring blossoms with the human form. The seasons are used as four subjects and treated in a daring modern way by the artists who designed the act.

The Belle of Bingville has moved to "Umphsville," and amidst her new surroundings she is far more popular than ever. "The Belle of Bingville" is the skit that Fred Whitefield and Marie Ireland played so well in the past. "Umphsville" is the title of their new vehicle which affords these clever farceurs an opportunity to carry on in the same characters but with absolutely new material. "Umphsville" is without a doubt the funniest skit these players have ever had.

Pistel and Johnson, in their "Stranded Minstrels" remind us that the only stage product of the 19th century that withstood the test of time is the burnt cork comedian. Their clean, wholesome, joyous picture of irresistible human nature, as nature exhibits herself in the colored race, is one of the best features in modern vaudeville. This applies especially to Messrs. Pistel and Johnson, who are among the best exponents of blackface comedy on the American vaudeville stage today.

Mang and Snyder are athletes of superior manner. In these days when the most difficult and hazardous feats are performed with apparent ease, it is hard for gymnasts to introduce anything new into their offering. This team, who style themselves "20th Century Wonders," are credited with these accomplishments. At any rate, they perform six minutes of quick and interesting acrobatics.

Other acts on this all-feature bill are "Tid-Bits of 1920," presented by Will J. Harris, with three stars, Gertrude Rial, Bobby Earl and Michel Kurzone; Bob Mills, the boy with the sunny smile, and the usual late Kinograms and topics of the day.

Special feature, coming Thursday, is Major Jack Allen, the king of the jungle, who is well known for his appearances in a series of wild animal hunting scenes, and the people should be very anxious to see the major himself at the Palace.
