THE BURDELL MURDER

A Mystery of 1857 That Has Never Been Solved.

A WOMAN AND A BOGUS BABY.

The Dector's Landlady Accused of the Deed and Acquitted After a Sensatio Trial-One of the Most Remarkable Co In the History of Crime.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Associ

Before the murder of Dr. Harvey Burdell there had been in the United States many crimes equally atrocious, but it is doubtful if there had been one since the death of Alexander Hamilton, which was regarded as a murder, that so stirred the nation. As in most cases of this kind, there was a woman involved, and it was believed then, as it is believed now, that if this woman was not directly responsible for Dr. Burdell's death she at least knew the person who committed the crime.

Dr. Harvey Burdell was a dentist by profession. He was born in Herkimer ounty, New York state, in 1811, so that

11/2 112. DR. HARVEY BURDELL WAS SEEN STANDING

ON HIS FRONT STEPS. he was 46 years of age at the time of his death. He was brought up on a farm and had few educational advantages in early life, but, having unusual force of charac ter, he determined to acquire an education, and this he did in the face of obstacle that would have intimidated a man of less strength. In those days the profession of dentistry was not so firmly established as it is at present, but young Burdell, by careful study, mastered all there was to be known in the theory and practice of dentistry, and, coming to New York in his twenty-fourth year, he soon found himself on the way to fame and fortune.

In early life Dr. Burdell was engaged to beautiful young girl in the interior of the state, but her parents objecting to him because he was poor he lived a bachelor all his life, unless indeed we are to believe all his life, unless indeed we are to believe the story of Mrs. Cunningham, who sub-sequently became his housekeeper. While his moral character was not of the best the fact that he attended closely to business and accumulated $150,000, which was then thought to be a large fortune, gave him a good standing in the community, and even in middle life designing mothers thought him an eligible match for girls not one-half his age. ness, Dr. Burdell did not deprive himself of the luxuries of life. He belonged to a number of clubs whose members were noted for fast living, and he was said to be fond of wine and all thereunto pertaining, though he never gambled. About five years before his death Dr. Burdell purchased the large dwelling house then known as 31 Bond street. The premises being much larger than he required for his personal use, he retained a bedroom a reception room and an operating room, and rented the rest of the building to Mrs Cunningham, who was known as his landlady.

Mrs. Cunningham was a large, florid woman of 40, whose husband had died a few years before in California. She had ried to the man whose-name she bore, and it was proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that her character, both before and after the alleged marriage, was not, like that of Cæsar's wife, above suspicion.

Among Mrs. Cunningham's lodgers there were two men who figured conspicu ously in her trial, one of whom, John J. Eckel, a good looking man of 40, had the showed that the relations between Mrs. Cunningham and Eckel were of the most intimate kind. Indeed she confessed that she was his mistress, and, to use his own language, "a very expensive one." An-other lodger that figured in the trial was a young man of 18, named Snodgrass, whose relations with Mrs. Cunningham's oldes daughter were, it was shown, the same as those of Eckel with the mother.

The other lodgers were irregular and did not figure in the trial, but Hannah Conlin, the cook, was a most important

Friday, Jan. 30, 1857, was a stormy, disagreeable day. The rain froze as it fell, and the walls of the houses and the pavements were covered with an armor of ice. At 5 p. m. on that day Dr. Harvey Burdell was seen by people living at 36, on the op-posite side of the street, standing on the front steps of his house, buttoning up his overcoat and raising an umbrella. This was not an unusual occurrence, for he was a man of very regular habits, and at that hour always went to the Metropolitan hotel, near by, for his dinner. Whether he went to the Metropolitan hotel this even-ing or not has never been ascertained, for he was never again seen alive.

At half past 10 on the night of the 30th the people in the house 36 Bond street, who were playing cards in the parlor, were startled by hearing the cry, "Murder!" They sprang to their feet and bent to listen, for they could not tell the direction from which the cry came. It was not repeated. That one short, sharp, thrilling cry was all they heard. Then, thinking it was the exclamation of some person who had stumbled on the slippery street, they resumed their amusements. About 19 e was never again seen alive.

o'clock that night a visitor, leaving 36 Bond street, saw a light in the basement of Dr. Burdell's house. It came from a fire, as of something being burned, and not from gas or a lamp, and this belief was confirmed by the smell of burning clothing or leather.

Dr. Burdell had an office boy named Thomas Callaban, whose data it was to Thomas Callahan, whose duty it was to sweep up the office and start the grate fires at 8 o'clock every morning in winter time. This boy, who lived outside with his parents, came to the office at 8 o'clock on the morning of the 31st. As was his habit, he first went down to the cellar to habit, he first went down to the cellar to get a scuttle of coal. As he neared the office he took out his deadlatch key to unlock the door and was surprised to find it open. He pushed it in a few feet, when it was stopped by a heavy body on the opposite side. He set down the scuttle and looked behind the door. Every gas jet was burning, and he saw that the object that had obstructed the door was the dead body of the Harvey Rundell. of Dr. Harvey Burdell.

The boy shouted and stared wildly about him. The body lay in a pool of blood. There was blood on the walls, blood on the floors, blood on the pictures and blood on the overturned furniture, all showing that Dr. Burdell, who was a powerful man, had made a terrific fight for his life befor he succumbed to the 15 dagger stabs, mos of which were fatal.

The boy rushed in to Mrs. Cunning-ham's dining room, where he found herself, the boarders and children placidly cating breakfast. On learning that the doctor was nurdered, Mrs. Cunningham shrieked and became hysterical, but Eckel, beyond turning pale, showed no sign of

The police were at once called in and doctors summoned, but the latter declared that Dr. Burdell had been dead at least

The news of the murder spread through the city, like the proverbial wildfire, and public opinion was quick to associate Mrs. Cunningham and her paramour, Eckel, with the crime. A coroner's jury was summoned, and its deliberations lasted for three days. During the investigation Hannah Conlin, the cook, swore that on the 30th a woman had come to the house, saying she had rented it of Dr. Burdell from the 1st of the following May, and as Mrs. Cunningham was out the cook showed her over the premises. When, on her return, Mrs. Cunningham learned this, she said to Hannah Conlin, "Dr. Burdell had better be careful or he may not live to sign the lease.'

Another curious fact came out in the evidence before the coroner's jury. Some of the most skillful surgical experts in the city were called in, and one and all swor that the wounds were inflicted by a long bladed, keen edged dagger. Owing to the nature of the wounds, the surgeons also declared that they were inflicted by a left handed person. Mrs. Cunningham was left handed.

The woman was certainly an excellen actress. She declared that she was the wife of Dr. Burdell, to whom she was secretly married, as was shown by a mar riage certificate, dated Oct. 28, 1856, and signed by the Rev. Dr. Marvine. Dr. Marvine distinctly remembered having married Mrs. Cunningham to somebody, but he could not recall the name or appearance of the man, and it was then believed that Mrs. Cunningham had induce some person, possibly Eckel, to represen

Although boldly and strenuously declar ing their innocence, the evidence against Mrs. Cunningham and Eckel was considered sufficient by the grand jury to lead to their indictment for the murder of Dr. Harvey Burdell. Both these people wer incarcerated in the Tombs. Henry I Clinton, one of the foremost criminal law-yers of the day, was retained by Mrs. Cun-ningham, who now called herself Mrs. Cunningham-Burdell. A. Oakey Hall, then district attorney for New York city, conducted the prosecution.

The trial lasted for three days, and the courtroom was crowded to suffocation hours before the time set for each day's of manhood, and he conducted the cas with characteristic force and ability. But to the surprise and indignation of the publie the jury returned a verdict of "not guilty." If any had had doubts as to Mrs. Cunningham's connection with the crime, they were set at rest after the release of berself and Eckel. As the widow of the murdered man, she claimed her dewer right in his estate, and she might have succeeded in this had not her avariciousness induced her to concect a scheme for getting possession of the whole. She claimed that she was about to become a mother, and that Dr. Burdell was the father of her unborn child. In order to carry out this plan it was necessary for her to purchase the services of a doctor who would lend himself to her pur-pose. She hit upon Dr. Uhl and offered him $1,000 if he would procure a newborn baby, bring it to her room, and then make affidavit that she was its mother. Dr. Uhl pretended to enter into the conspiracy, but before taking another step he laid the whole matter before District At-

A respectable married woman named Anderson was delivered at this time of a daughter named afterward Justitia. This child was taken to Mrs. Cunningham's room, where it may be said to have had a second birth, for the woman, pretending to be sick in bed, claimed it was hers. The conspiracy was at once made known to the public, but for some reason Mrs. Cunningham was not prosecuted. Afterward the great showman, Barnum, exhibited the genuine mother and baby in his museum to the great profit of all concerned. erney Hall. The district attorney decide

So far as the law is concerned, the mur-derer of Dr. Harvey Burdell remains un-known. There are, however, but few New Yorkers living who can remember the tragedy who do not feel very certain that they could name the assa

The responsibilities of the office are heavy and numerous. He will be con stantly racking his brain for new method of trapping the perpetrators of daring and mysterious crimes. He will be expected mysterious crimes. He will be expected to continue to keep all the saloons in that big city closed on Sundays. On holidays and at events where great crowds assemble his men are relied upon to keep everything running smoothly and to prevent foolish people from getting hurt. A big crowd is often as hard to handle as a mob.

Just how Chief Conlin will act whe called upon to suppress a mob he has al-ready indicated. It startled some people when he announced that, if necessary, he would use cannon loaded with grape and canister and shoot, when he did shoot, to "Answer.—Form my reserves in City Hall park, form into battalions, march to bridge, take cars and march to place were needed."

The answer to another question, inquiring what disposal he would make of the national guard in case a general street car strike made it necessary to call out all the regiments, was the subject of some comment. In it he described how he would dispose of the military at various points, and where he would locate artillery. Then he added, "Only grape and canister to be used." The labor unions at once protested but Chief Conlin reiterated that while h hoped such a time would never come, if it did come, he would do exactly as he had
