Center Hill Reservoir in central Tennessee is the home of more smallmouth bass than most fishermen would believe.

most fishermen would believe. They teem in its pine-rimmed waters, waiting for the angler who chooses the right bait and presents it the right way at the right time in the right place.

Now that sounds simple enough. In spring the smallmouths are laying in shallow water off the rock-lined banks, preying on small fish, crustaceans and insects that prefer the shallows. And they are ripe as a treeful of Cling peaches in fall, ready for the picking.

A lot of people are picking them off with Doll Flys, minute bits of lead and polar bear hair, more often than not black in color; pitched as close as in color; pitched as close as possible to the bank and reeled in v-e-r-y slowly. Like most bass fishing, the action is hottest early in the morning and late in the evening. During the hot part of the day the wise fisher-men hit the sack and rest up for another assault on the bass along towards evening. REALLY TOUGH

REALLY TOUGH

Night fishing is highly productive, too, although casting from a boat is really tough on a dark night, what with tree branches seeming to reach out and deliberately trying to snag a carelessly-tossed lure. The best bet here is to beach the boat and fish from the shore, finding an open spot among the trees and flipping a lure parallel to the bank, if possible.

Of course during the daytime a lot of anglers forego the rest period and troll instead, throttling their Mercury outboards down to a whisper and drifting along, presenting their lures to an awful lot of water in a relatively short time.

Other fish are biting well there too, such as crappies, drum and largemouth bass, but the smallmouth is still king.

Plan To Make A Better Player

Coach George Wilson of the Detroit Lions was searching for running help for his 1962 team when he came up with halfback Tom Watkins of the Cleveland

Watkins, the former Iowa State All-American, came to Detroit, along with quarterback Milt Plum and linebacker Dave Lloyd in exchange for quarterback Jim Ninowski, halfback Hopalong Cassady and defensive end Bill Glass in an off-season trade.

Wilson figures the trade will help the Lions in two ways, first, with the improved running provided by Watkins, and second, that the presence of Watkins will make a better ball player of veteran Dan Lewis.

"Watkins, despite the fact that he is a bit underweight after a shown us that he is going to be a real exciting runner," offers Wilson. "While he is not a speed demon. Tom has plenty of running class and good moves so that he should be a big boost to our offensive unit.

"With a player of Watkins' caliber around, Lewis, a 210pounder with great speed, could easily realize the full potential that has been his since he came into the league in 1958."

While Lewis' record shows a creditable 4.4 rushing average real first was created in for four years of NFL duty, Here the student can learn long gainer. On that occasion, Watkins was used sparingly by Cleveland in his rookie season, When a man jumps from this sharing work with Bobby Mitchell.

Looking ahead to the new season. Wilson figures that the trade The public is cordially invited is a cinch to solve the problem of additional rushing strength. If Watkins can beat gut' Lewis for the regular job, the team will definitely be improved, but if Lewis retains his position, it means he has improved his play sufficiently to beat back the threat of the talented newcomer from Cleveland.

Want to have a memorable vacation that won't cost much more than staying home, see some of the most glorious scenery this country offers, and preview the wonders of the next century? Not a mere pipe dream, this is en-tirely possible if you take a camping trip to the Seattle World's Fair this summer. Practically any enough camping equipment for the average family. Time is the only limiting factor. If you are driving coast to coast, you'll need more time than the usual two-week vacation.

According to The American Thermos Products Company whose modern camping gear provides outdoor living with indoor comfort, the four essentials of family camping are shelter, light, refrigeration, and a means of cooking. A camp shelter is usually a tent, and one of the best is the "Pop-Tent" which pops up in seconds, has no poles and comes in models sleeping two or four. For lighting and cooking, "Thermos" makes Holiday camp stoves and camp lanterns that burn any gasoline, so if you run out of fuel you can siphon from your car. Their modern, insulated picnic jugs and ice chests solve the refrigeration problem.

For detailed information on modern family camping, you'll want "The THERMOS Guide to Modern Family Camping," a colorfully illustrated 32-page camping handbook. To get your copy, send 50¢ to The American Thermos Products Company, P.O. Box 521 PR. Norwich, Conn.

There are 400 camping grounds in Washington located in 65 state parks, two national parks, seven national forests and at National Park Service recreational areas. These are available on a first-come-first-served basis, but you can make reservations in private camping grounds by writing to Expo Lodging Service, Seattle 9, Wash.
