Particularly Is it True of Woolens

Therefore we repeat our assertion of last Saturday—It behooves every man to meet his needs, not alone for this season, but in so far as practicable to anticipate his requirements for next year.

The Merchandise we own today is very cheap; it will seem even more so next fall

Despite the war there was no really great advance in clothing last year. But for next fall you will find sharp advances and the suit or overcoat you purchase today will be at a price way under the market value of the same fabric and workmanship next fall. The forehanded man is preparing in every way possible, for the advancing prices, saving not only money for himself, but securing in many instances a much superior cloth than he will get next fall at an advanced price.
