

THRILLING INCIDENT.—Steamboats do catch fire sometimes. We had two or three dreadful corroborations of the unpleasant fact of late. We came near being an unconscious victim, once, of such a calamity.

No matter what it was—it is not long ago, however—and no matter which is the boat—though we saw her yesterday at the wharf, looking as innocent as an infant.—We had departed for a neighboring city.—Provided with all the daily papers, we had taken a comfortable seat on the upper deck to enjoy the weather and the scenery.—While thus engaged, the master of the boat, with whom we were acquainted, seated himself by our side, and for an hour kept us deeply interested with his humorous narratives, his droll histories, and his comic commentaries.

We soon observed, however, that his face began to grow serious, and that he often pined in his happiest flood of repartee to cast a look of embarrassment at the boat and at the water. We thought that we were making rather a tardy progress; but we knew his prudence, and so calmly submitted to his judgment. In a short time his uneasiness became too apparent, and, excusing himself, he left us, and hurried up to the pilot. We curiously followed him.

"Mr. Blank, what's the matter with the boat?" was his abrupt inquiry.

"Can't say sir. It's on a spree yesterday. Perhaps he's asleep!"

The individual called Bill, we found, was the engineer. Down went the little captain to the engine room. We were not far behind him.

What a sight encountered his petrified gaze. His eyes dilated until the balls almost leaped from their bursting sockets! There lay the engineer on the floor fast asleep! A tremendous fire roared under the red-hot boiler, and not three inches of water inside of it!

We comprehended enough of the scene to feel that we were on the verge of destruction. We saw at a glance that alarm would only hasten our impending fate.—What was to be done? Pump water into the boiler? Why, it would collapse in an instant! We could only watch our little captain.

The moment he beheld the imminence of the danger, he became as calm and cool as an icicle. He retreated to his state-room. He was not absent five minutes, but it seemed, in our pent-up agony of apprehension, like an hour. We could not leave the engine room. We expected every moment to hear the terrific explosion that would end our days on earth; but were fascinated as with a spell, to the spot. We could but look on the blazing furnace and the sleeping man at its glowing front.

When the captain returned he had a loaded pistol in each hand. He pointed both to the head of the unconscious slumberer, and then, with a violent kick rendered him suddenly wide awake.

"Draw that fire!" said he, nodding at the grate, around the wooden work of which the smoke already began to curl from the intense heat.

"Great God!" exclaimed the engineer, springing up, "it will be certain death."

"So it will be without, in ten seconds," sternly replied the captain, placing the muzzle of one pistol at the temple of the frightened man.

He said no more, but throwing up the furnace doors, rapidly commenced to draw the coals from beneath the boiler.

"One moment more determines our fate!" hoarsely whispered our little captain, as he beckoned us to begone.

We hastened to place ourselves as far apart as we could get. Five minutes more passed that seemed about like an eternity. Then we saw the hose carefully handed down—the fire buckets passed along—the pumps put in motion.

The captain next came on deck and hailed a passing vessel. It came too. The steamboat had stopped by this time, and explaining that the machinery was out of order, he passed us all on board the other vessel, and shoved off. We got back to New York before night, and not a passenger had imbibed the faintest idea of the real cause of their detention.

The next day we met the captain, and grasping our hand, he said with solemn earnestness—"God forbid that we should ever pass through such a scene again!"

PHASES OF LIFE.—On a cold day in January last, a pensive-faced boy, apparently nine or ten years of age, sat in a broker's office, twirling between his thumb and forefinger a bright new penny upon the balized table before him.

The occupant of the office had gone to the "Board," leaving with the boy to close up at the usual time; that he would not return again that day, as he was going to take a sleigh-ride.

The thumb and finger continued making the rapid whirrs of the penny. The mind within was also engaged; his skates, his little sleigh, and his dinner, were the objects of his thoughts—for the bit that mother gave him for lunch was swallowed up before ten o'clock. He could not help it, he was 'so hungry'.

Besides mother had promised that she would try and have a dinner that day; and Hope whispered that she would, and then—such fun on his sleigh with the neighboring boys! A restless desire to get home soon followed visions of so much happiness.

He must look at the Trinity clock. "Ten minutes," he softly articulated, and my time will be up." As he closed the door a forenoon-looking man pushed toward him, with hat in hand, supplicating charity. The reverie was broken.

The child and man looked long and silently at each other. The latter, with a still idiotic stare, exclaimed, "whose boy are you?"

"Mrs. Hammet's," replied the bereaved, but ingenious boy.

The unhappy man re-crossed the threshold with the vague, uncertain feeling that the little pale-face and himself stood in relation to each other.

It was true.

The father and son had again met! And the hope of the young child, which a few minutes before had buoyed him up—where was it? Gone!

The little form sank down. The tears flowed fast and fast. "My poor father!"

was spoken in low and heart-broken tones by the stricken child. The "cross" was already his. Skates, sleigh, dinner—all were forgotten in that cruel anguish.

Again the penny was turned, and in an interval of child-like grief, he wished he could spend it. But no! the penny must be kept for the forty-man. He crossed the river to reach his home—the home of his lone mother—who for six long years, had toiled struggled, friendless and alone. The earthly tie was broken; but not by death. The husband and father was a drunkard and an outcast.—Home Journal.

Mum's Eggs.—The season for gathering the eggs of the Murh, or sea fowl, from the South Farallone Island closes about the middle of the coming month. We are informed by one of the parties interested that up to the present time, the company engaged in the business have succeeded in collecting the enormous quantity of twelve thousand dozen, near a hundred and fifty thousand eggs, and estimates, before the season is over, to reach as high as several thousand dozen more.—These eggs are sold in the market at from forty to forty-five cents per dozen, realizing a handsome profit. Last year they brought as high as seventy-five cents.

About six years ago several members of the present company located upon the Island, built themselves a shanty under the lee of rocks, and whiled away the time in fishing. Their former companions on the main land upbraided them for their conduct, giving as a reason that they neglected the opportunity to realize a speedy fortune in not taking part in the speculative mania of the times.

They persisted in remaining where they were, notwithstanding the inducements held out to them to give up their isolated abode. What was the consequence? They shortly after discovered that the eggs of the gulls, which came to their rocky retreat, was a nutritious article of food. From that time forward they thought their fortunes made, while their former companions were making money one day and losing it another.—Since then, during part of the spring and summer months, they have been busily engaged in collecting these eggs, creating a demand for them in the market, supplying families and restaurants, and selling them to outward bound vessels, and pocketing the proceeds. They own a little schooner which carries them to and from the city, supplying our citizens with fresh eggs about three times a week.

The manner by which they single out the fresh eggs from the stale ones is singular and interesting. The gulls lay their eggs every night, and in the daytime they mark out a place on the rocks, say for instance twenty feet square, or in a circle, and if they find no fresh ones in the spot so marked out they break all the eggs within it. Night comes on and the gulls in myriads flock to their usual places of rest, and finding all the eggs broken, which probably they had laid two or three nights before, proceed to lay fresh ones. After the gulls take wings in the morning, the employees of the company scramble up the rocks and collect them, pack them in baskets, slip them on board the schooner and set sail for the city, where they find ready sale to the market vendors, before one-half of our population are up and at out.—Teen Talk.

"FORT VIGILANCE."—In addition to the sand-bag breast-work thrown up to protect the approach from Sacramento Street, we notice that one, equally formidable and extensive, has been erected so as to guard the entrance to the rear of the rooms in Hallock street, out of Davis.

For the benefit of those at a distance, who know nothing of these headquarters except what they read in the papers, we feel inclined to give in detail, a description of the locality. The rooms are embraced in the block bounded by Front, Davis, California and Sacramento streets, having an entrance from, and fronting on, the latter. This square is 275 feet each way, and is covered with two story brick buildings, and is about one block from the water of the bay. The Rooms proper, are upon Sacramento street, and embrace about 100 feet frontage in the center of the block. This front is protected by a sand-bag breast-work, which is thrown up about 10 feet high, six feet thick, and 20 feet from the building. A narrow passway through this fortification admits members to the retreat, from which ingress is made into the buildings. There are guards stationed at the pass through the breast-work, and also a double set of the entrance to the doors, as well as another at the stairway that leads to the second floor, where the different departments and cells are located. A small street, called Hallock street, puts into the center of the block from Davis street, which admits of a rear entrance to the Rooms, and which is barricaded by sandbags, as stated in the first part of this paragraph.

Upon the second floor the apartments cover more space than upon the first, as they have opened communication with several adjoining buildings, by making doorways, so that they must now occupy nearly or quite one-half of the entire block upon the second floor.

Upon the roof is placed, in a conspicuous position, an alarm bell of about 700 pounds weight, as well as several pieces of cannon, which overlook the different streets. Nearly all the stores in the block are occupied as usual by business houses, and their transactions go on uninterrupted. The corresponding block upon the opposite side of Sacramento street is vacant, having been burnt over a few months since. The adjoining blocks on the other sides, except on the last, are composed of solid brick and masonry work, thus preventing any possibility of firing the buildings by the opponents of the Committee. About a hundred guards are kept constantly on watch, to protect the Rooms and property of the Committee.—Alta.

"ONLY IN FEN."—At a baptism in a Western State, a few weeks since, a girl of a sly disposition, about to be immersed, very naturally resisted the attempts of the Minister to lead her into the water, and after a short struggle began to sob and cry with great violence. At this moment, while a crowd of spectators were anxiously watching the result, a younger brother of the girl stepped up to her and exclaimed, in an under tone—"Don't be scared, Sal, they're only in fun!"

Humboldt Siding Saloon,
AND BATH ROOMS,
Main Street, Weaverville.

THE UNDERSIGNED announces that his Establishment, so long known to the public, has recently undergone thorough repairs and alterations, and been fitted up in a style of elegance unsurpassed by any similar house in Northern California. It has been his aim to make it an agreeable and delightful resort for gentlemen desirous of undergoing tonical operations, or to employ water as a detergent agent.

His arrangements for bathing are hard to beat. The proprietor scarcely deems it necessary to say much in reference to its superiority, to those who have already honored him with their patronage, except to assure them that it is very much improved in every respect.

No pains will be spared to make his Saloon a pleasant place of resort.
