G. H. F .- Please tell me how to trisect an angle?

A. This is one of the old problems over which mathematicians his reported engagement to Miss Kathhave puzzled and amused themselves for many centuries. In theoretic elements geometry it is permissible to use only the ruler and the compass, and the ruler must be ungraduated. With these conditions it is impossible to trisect an angle. The problem can be solved if two points are marked on the ruler and these be moved so as to fit the figure.

Morse was on his way back to the bare cell in the Tombs which he is destined to occupy until Monday at least as he made these remarks. The little multimillionaire and former ice trust head was limping between two deputy marshals. He asked permission to hire a cab.

"I can't get a carriage for a counterfeiter, and I can't get one for you," replied Marshal Henkel.

Alfred H. Curtis, the codefendant and former associate of Morse in the wrecking of the National Bank of North America, was sentenced for five years, but sentence was suspended.

sentence of Morse was allowed so that the notice of appeal could be filed. Attorneys for the convicted financier applied for an order fixing bail, but this was denied, and the prisoner was returned to his cell in the Tombs. The fate of Curtis was known first. and when Judge Hough of the United States court announced that the expresident of the bank would escape actual imprisonment because he had been merely a tool in the hands of a "dominating master" there was an attempt at applause in the crowded courtroom. But that was quickly suppressed by the judge. When the words "fifteen years in the federal prison" came from the bench there was another demonstration in that jammed room. But nobody could describe it as being a note of exultation or grief or any other human emo tion.

Just a Weird Murmur.

It was just a weird murmur, a combination of many voices. It was over in a second, and then there was a silence just as weird, which no hammering of the gavel was needed to bring about.
