TEETH AND YOUR HEALTH

Our teeth in many instances are the fundamental causes of both good and bad health. Well cared for teeth promote better health in the entire system. Teeth that are decayed and infected with pus are a menace to health and always affect some other organ of the human body, interfering with its correct functioning and presage a run down condition or more specifically, a serious ailment, resulting in many cases, fatally.

One hundred years ago the neglect of dentistry by the medical profession led to its development as a special study, and while the relationship was recognized by some, only in comparatively recent years have both the medical and dental professions definitely realized the relationship between the condition of one's teeth and health in general.

Sir William Osler, one of Europe's greatest authorities on internal medicine, has said: "There is not one single thing in preventative medicine that equals mouth hygiene and preservation of the teeth." Dr. Charles H. Mayo, of Rochester, Minnesota, says: "It is quite as important that dentists have a general knowledge of disease as it is that physicians have it, and while it is true that the dentist should refer many patients to the physician for medical examinations, it is also true that the physician should refer many more to the dentist for the good of the patient."

He further states: "Neuritis, arthritis, anemia, asthma, ulceration of the stomach, gastritis, colitis, high blood pressure, colds, bronchial infections and many other systemic infections result from infect teeth and three-fourths of the abdominal cases operated on at the Mayo clinic are the consequential results of infection arising from the teeth.

These and countless other similar statements by eminent authorities on disease, strongly substantiate the fact that many of our physical ills are often caused by ulcerated teeth and diseases of surrounding tissues. Dentists have consequently acquired a general knowledge of the physical ailments and in so doing have made dental practice a most important specialty in preventative medicine.

For this reason it is important that everyone have a thorough dental examination at least twice a year. Dr. W. S. Lackner, whose office is located in Tucson at 79 North Stone, is one of our prominent professional men who is enjoying a large and well merited clientele from the city and surrounding territory.

This office has made a scientific study of diseases and afflictions of the teeth and is performing a public service that commands the highest commendation as the work is done in a most satisfactory manner.
