Native Sons and Their Festivals-A Switchman's Presence of Mind-Pearce Gobbled Up by His Expectant Creditors.

Considerable excitement was caused on Washington street yesterday by the leap of Professor W. C. Gaston, the lecturer on mnemonics, from the window of his room in the fourth story of the Brunswick House, being a distance of eighty feet. He jumped out with his clothing and hat on and cane in hand. He would, without doubt, have been killed had he not alighted on the cloth awning of the store below, from which he bounded and then rolled off on the pavement. Regaining his feet, he put his hat on his head, picked up his cane and going round to the elevator on the Ninth-street side rang the bell and went up, as though nothing had happened. When he reached his room door, however, it was locked on the inside and he could not enter. He became violent, and called upon the Savior to let him in. He was finally taken to the County Jail, and will be examined for insanity to-day, unless he is better. He had been stopping at the hotel for about two weeks, and is said to have a large class in mnemonics in Oakland, as well as many pupils in San Francisco.

At the meeting of the Board of Education Ronald B. Gleason of Cambridge, Mass., was elected to the position of Industria Educator, a position recently created in the public schools. The salary was fixed at $1800 per annum, and the Superintendent was requested to notify Professor Gleason by telegraph of his election.

CONSIDERING THE NATIVE SONS. The Ladies' Committee of One Hundred of Oakland discussed the habit of the Native Sons of the Golden West of having intoxicating drinks on festive occasions. It was suggested that the Native Daughters be asked to use their influence to break up the custom. Prominent members and officers of the Grand Parlor deny the charges made, that the Native Sons are drinkers, and point to the fact that the laws of the order prohibit the use of any kind of intoxicating liquors at banquets or receptions. They think the Committee of One Hundred has been misinformed, and that the organization should not be blamed for the acts of individual members.

COLE'S DRAKE.

A Patriotic Bird That Celebrated the Glorious Fourth.

It was the anniversary of the declaration of independence and in the morning at that. Poultry fancier Jake Cole sat in slippered feet on the north side of his house the Altamont Addition reading the Realty Review.

There was a smile of contentment on Mr Cole's face as he looked up in perusing the paper and surveyed his possessions. In front of him were many valuable 25-foot town lots and a large apricot orchard, from which Mr. Cole derived a handsome income this year. About his chair were fine specimens of Minorca and Andalusian breeds of poultry. There were also Leghorns, Plymouth Rocks, Cochins, Brahmas and even a Guinea-fowl was wallowing, under a Monterey cypress near by.
"Quack, quack, quack!" and a mon-strous Imperial Pekin drake came around the house and proceeded to drive the Guinea from its retreat.

Hardly was this accomplished when Oscar Hardly was this accomplished when Oscar Cole, a bright little fellow, came bounding out of the house with several packages of firecrackers and a lighted punk.

"Be careful," said the fancier, "and do not set anything afire. What a foolish thing fire-crackers are, but then I like to see the boys enjoy themselves. Why, when I was a boy back in Missouri I used to long and long for the Fourth of July to come so I could make a noise. Now. Oscar, be care-

The cracker hadn't been on the path but two seconds when the drake saw it. With a low "quack!" he made a rush for the ex-plosive; extended his neck, gave one "gulp" and it was gone. The cracker ex-ploded in his throat with a stifled report. The drake shook his head while tears stood in his eyes. Jake dropped the Realty Review, placed his elbow on his knees and his head on his hands and eyed the drake closely.
"Papa," said the boy anxiously, "will the

"I don't know. Give him another cracker." Oscar lighted a common-size cracker and threw it down in the path. The drake eyed it suspiciously for a moment, gave a quack and a gulp and it was gone.

The cracker might have been seen making its passage down the neck of the duck. On reaching the craw it went off, for that portion of the body where the craw is was very much extended for the moment, and there was a dull report. The Pekin was thrown on his back, but he recovered quickly, got up, poised his body in the air and flopped his wings.

"Give him one of your big ones, Oscar," said his father. An enormous red-head cracker was lighted. It was as large as a seven-year-

No sooner had the red-head reached the path than the drake went for it. He had great difficulty in getting it into his mouth, but succeeded after one or two vain and prolonged efforts.

The drake rushed for the pond—for Mr. Cole has one in his yard—and dove into the water. He disappeared entirely. A second after his disappearance the surface of the water was; greatly agitated. Monstrous bubbles came to the top to burst and a deuse volume of smoke a second later appeared.

Finally the pond became tranquil when Jake Cole's drake came to the surface, crawled out on the bank and spit out the burning wrapper of the red-head.

The drake, Mr. Cole says, he procured from V. B. Cobb, the well-known San Joaquin rancher.—Fresno Expositor, July 7th.
