HEN summer kindles purple fires.
That run along the fox-glove-spires,
And set the meadows all agiow
With blazing torches in a row,
Those July days beneath her feet
June grass that once was fair and sweet
Grows crisp and sere, then quick she flees
The humming of her belted bees,
And sets within her meadows glad
A host of fellows emerald clad.
These wee musicians of the field,
When nestling birds no song-burst yield,
Take up the strain, and from their bows
In thy tide the music flows,
A mimic music, shrill and thin,
Breathed out from elfin violin.
Then "Katy" cames with her old ways
And argues through the August days,
And last in damask ebon drest
The summer's very latest guest.
He winds his clock and counts the time
That sunny fields and skies may rhyme,
For well he knows, the old-time friend,
That summer's reign is at an end,
And numbers with his tick, tick, tock,
Each day of grace. The little clock
Beats out the long September hours,
Beats out the death of all the flowers,
Numbers each falling leaf and brown
Until it, too, at last runs down,
And then with vanished birds and bees
The summer flits across the seas.

DEATH AND A LIVING LOVE.

BY WALTER LITTLEFIELD. HAD been absent about two months, two short months, and yet they seemed years. Slowly and with inscrutable weariness I ascended the creaking, narrow, old stairway to my office. Pausing on the landing a moment for breath I glanced out through the dust-cov-ered panes down upon the busy street beneath. A few streaks of bright July sunshine struggled brough the window and fell upon the floor in long strips of dusky yellow light. Then I went on. It seemed that it had never taken me so ong before to climb those two flights. Ah, but ben I was younger-two months younger. I on, It seemed that that the there is the heavy antique book-case that had been my falsely and been to lights. All, but then I was younger—two months-younger. I reached my door and the next moment I had turned the key and entered.

How dark everything seemed. I could scarcely see my hand before me, and moving cautiously along I reached the window and undid the shutters. In a second the room was filled with light and I could look about me.

Yes, yes, the place is very much as I left it. There is the heavy antique book-case that had been my father's, and behind its half-raised curtain I catch sight of the somber volumes of his school. Above on a little shelf is an array of vials, the labels of which bear his hand-writing. It was years since he placed them there with his parting advice; and yet, it seems but yesterday; and he is gone. On the other side of the room stands my book-case, and through the glass doors I lead the titles of many books of our modern school of medicine, and above, under an ovar globe, is my microscope. How vividity I our modern school of medicine, and above, under an oval globe, is my microscope. How vividly I recall the day, but three years ago, when I had bought it with my "own" money, the first money that I had earned myself. As I look over the room a thousand recollections pass through my mind of things long gone by, a thousand forms and faces troop in endless confusion before my us to vivify them, then it rouses me, and with seems to vivify them, then it rouses me, and with a sigh I drop into a chair, and, with my hands clasped before me, my head sunk upon my breast, I remain motionless and in deep thought. Suddenly I start. No, no, I heard nothing. It was only the leaves rustling among the trees outside my window perhaps. And yet, there it is again. Ah, I hear it plainly now. It is coming nearer and nearer, that rustle again, and at my door.

vly the door swings back on its hinges, then Slowly the door swings back on its hinges, then closes again, as if one had entered, yet I saw nothing. A strange feeling steals over me that penetrates through every fiber of my body, a feeling of nameless dread. It exerts itself upon me and soon I am completely in its power. Now as I look up I start indeed.

"Ah, yes, you have come. You startled me. I did not know at first. Ah, you come to see if I have kept my promise. No fear of that, m'amle. Ha, ha, you shall see; you will think it beautiful as I do, perhaps, but you must not love it for it is as I do, perhaps, but you must not love it f as I do, perhaps, but you must not love it for it is mine now; mine, and you no longer have any right to it. No, no; you must not forget. It was your dying wish. Hark! I remember your very words: 'M'amie, I love you more than my life, and yet I can do nothing, nothing; but after I am dead promise me that you will do that.' Yes, those were your words and I have kept that promise, oh, so faithfully. You doubt—but no, that cannot be; and yet—well, I will show you."

Lagis and annoach the table on which lies I arise and approach the table on which lies a large handbag that I had set down there on my entrance. Springing back the clasps I open it, and draw forth an object carefully enveloped

In lines.

Removing the wrapping with the greatest care, piece by piece, at length the object itself appeared in view, and a second later I hold in my hand a human skull. It is a small skull and of perfect proportions. The bone is polished almost to reflection; the teeth are set in perfect symmetry, and gleam like the purest pearl. I hold it to my face and press my lips to those teeth. I kiss those stony cheeks and those hol-

The dusty old office is shrunk into a long and narrow one. Two rows of seats line the sides and there are many, many windows, looking through which I behold rapidly shifting scenes. There are forests, meadows, a long stretch of sand with the sea beyond, and then the roofs and steeples of a great city. All pass so quickly before my eyes. Now I am in that great city. I see it all—the broad, sunny avenues, the stately mansions, the walss shaded with palmettos, the carriages passing, the children playing under the trees, and above, the pale blue sky. Yes! yes! I remember I have called myself an invalid, and now in this far-off Southern city I will eajoy life and will live as fancy pleases. I go to the theater, I go to the opera, there are midnight scenes over the green table, there are luxurious drives in the park in the afternoon, when the sun, struggling through the vapors which arise from the river, appears like a dood-red ball, and a cool breath is wafted northward from the guif. I have letters, too, and I soon find myself attending receptions, calling at beautiful villas, or slpoling tea in some shady nook among the oranges and palmettos.

One night, amid the flowers and the music of the ball, she comes. She, for whom I have been waiting so long and patiently; she, my ideal.

One night, and the howers and the music of the ball, she comes. She, for whom I have been waiting so long and patiently; she, my ideal. Her black eyes search for a second into these gray ones of mine, for an instant her lingering banks of copper-tuited clouds. These sink with it, and suddenly a lurid light creeps over all; then the edges of the clouds are tinted and it, and suddenly a lurid light creeps over all; then the edges of the clouds are tinted and streaked with parti-colored flames, light floating masses appear, of various shades and tints; dazzling beams flash forth across the sky, and illuminated with rich orange light the eastern landscape. Ah, the glory of that Southern sunset! And in the calm and peaceful twilight we retrace our steps.

A moment we pause and look over the water to where the cotton trees rise like phantoms from the river's bank. We hear the wail of the curlew sounding forforn and mournful on the night air; a breath steals upon us from the young willows, filling the atmosphere with a delicate perfune as of lotus flowers. Far away on the western shore are the swamps of the cypress, and below is the bright light of the boat as it turns the bend in the river; we can hear the throb of her engines as she steams away toward the lower levee.

There at my side she stands, my ideal. All doubts and fears are over now, and with fingers locked in each other's clasp, we gaze into the beauty of the night, and in dream into the life beyond. Bending my face toward her, I whisper: "You love me, m'annie?"

A moment she stands erect in all her majesty, then gently her head sinks forward until it rests upon my breast. I hold her to me, waiting, waiting. At length a faint, sweet murmur reaches my ear: "More than my life."

Two weeks of Joy, heavenly joy; for that brief space I seemed a mortal tasting the bliss of immortality.

Then the fever.

Two weeks of joy, heavenly joy; for that brief space I seeped a mortal tasting the bliss of immortality.

Then the fever.

Day after day the torrid sun pours down, and night after night the lamps give forth their feverish glimmer on the dark forms that pass like phantoms through the streets. Grass grows and withers between the flagging, and the market place is silent and deserted. The graves increase by tens, by scores; yet, still, day upon day the sun gives forth its fatal heat.

Oh, is there a God?

In a second, in a flash of light, she is stricken from my side. She is not dead, but lingers on from day to night, from night to day, fading, fading, why cannot my love make her stay? Night comes on.

"I am going, I am going," she whispers. "Remember, remember, it is my parting wish. Come closer to me that I may whisper it to you. Ah, why do you start? It is the only thing that I can give you, m'anne. You have been so kind and goad, and I have done nothing, nothing. Promise me. You cannot, ah, but do it. It is my remembrance to you, my gift; you must keep it with you always. Prom—" and her voice ceases, a tremor creeps over her; then suddenly the life that is about to go returns, and, starting up, her eyes fixed upon some object before her, she clings to my hand, while I bathe her with my tears.

"Promise me, promise me," she gasps.

I bow my head. An ineffable smile lights up those wan features and shines forth from those sunken eyes, full of the wonder of the tomb. Is it her departing spirit that speaks? "Oh, never, never, part with it, and I will watch and guard those wan features and shines forth from those sunken eyes, full of the wonder of the tomb. Is it her departing spirit that speaks? "On, never, never, part with it and I will watch and guard you. Here I shall be buried; there I shall live—always."

I spiring from my chair. The room whirls like lightning, and, dazzied, I sink back. Gradually the objects in the room assume their familiar shapes, and I look about me.

There is no one here, and crushing the mass of bone to my heart, I cry aloud in my agony: "No! No! Not there! Not there! Here!—hic—jace!—sepulta!"

[As fantastic and unreal as may seem this tale, it is nevertheless true. On the office table of a Boston physician is a human skull that once formed part of a beautiful girl of New Orleans. She was affianced to the physician, but soon after, being taken down with yellow fever and knowing that she must die, she begged her fiance to take her skull after her death, to dissect it and keep li with him always He promised, and that promise he has most faithfully kept.]

Politics are very lively just now in White Pine County, Nev., with six candidates for the office of Sheriff. The new school-house at Ferndale, Humboldt County, was destroyed by fire last Tuesday night. Loss $7000. A. B. Whitney has been appointed Tax Collector of Los Angeles County by the Supervisors in place of Platt, removed. The Porterville Enterprise says a shoct on grew thirty-eight inches in seven days. A son of Farmer Givens of Bear Creek, Merced County, was thrown from his horse Merced County, was thrown from his horse on Friday afternoon and fractured his skull. The handsome residence of Judge W. H. Smith of Monrovia, Los Angeles County, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday. Loss,

A young man named Moore tried to blow out a coal-oil lamp at Spokane Falls on Tuesday. It exploded and he was dangerously burned. The street-car lines of Corvallis, Oregou, are to be extended to meet the depots of both the Southern Pacific and the Oregon Pacific railroads.

The First National Bank at the Dalles, Oregon, was robbed of $10,000 on Tuesday by burglars who dug a tunnel into the vault and forced open the door. Thomas Collins, who stole a team at Red Bloff last July, and while resisting arrest at St. Heleni shot Officer Howard, has been retired to San Quentin for ten years The barn of Farmer Rose of Indian Valley, San Luis Obispo County, was burned down the other day. The fire was caused by the children playing with matches. Judge Shaw of Los Angeles has declared the office of County Tax-Collector, held by Robert Platt, vacant, on account of his retaining money alleged to be due the treasury. One fruit packing company of San Jose shipped over 200,000 pounds of canned goods gle shipment ever sent from Santa Clara County. The outfit of a hop-picker that started from Howell Prairie, Oregon, the other day, com-prised 2 packages of cigarettes, a bottle of whisky, a pack of cards, a pistol and a pair A fine stick of pine was cut last week at Mison's Camp, Washington, for the Port Blakeley mill. It was 136 feet long, 40 inches through the butt and 34 inches through the top. Bishop Donaldson and President Rich, Mormon dignitaries, have been arrested at Boise City, Idaho, on charges of conspiracy. Warrants are out for other prominent members of the church. Antonio Gaspia was instantly killed near in the whours.

When Secretary Gardiner of the Anaheim Irrigation District secured the 2850 bonds from the lithographers he found that it would require him to sign his name fifty-one times to each bond with its coupons. He expects to be able to finish the job in fifteen months.

A THRILLING SCENE.

A Desperate and Exciting Duel Ninety

Feet Above Ground. Two men fighting in mid-air. This was the terrible scene enacted a few days since

To fall on the pipes was to break arms and legs and back. To fall on the plates was to be cut into huge and ghastly slices.

The man's hand trembled, and his hammer dropped from his nerveless grasp. The hand swung over and grasped Mique around the loins with an awful tenacity, and there the men struggled on the awful verge of the scaffold, and at that dizzy height. Dennice scaffold, and at that dizzy height. Dennice had almost managed to swing his weight on the scaffold when Mique's hickory shirt ripped, and back the man went into space, this time losing the purchase of his heel and swinging clear over, so that he held himself only by one arm and hung suspended upright in the air.

Mique managed to thrust the toes of his left foot between the two narrow planks that constituted the scaffold, and thus acquired a leverage. Throwing over the other shoulder, by a strong and almost miraculous movement, he swung the suspended body of Dennice back to the platform and dashed his face against the tower. There he lay, motionless and still, and when their companions reached them they found that both had fainted dead away. The awful duel had lasted less than feets each at his three in G G Gossage, San Diego Antonio Gaspia was instantly killed near Loma Prieta, Santa Cruz County, last Friday, by a tree falling on him. Before the body was removed two large sections had to be sawed from the trunk of the tree.

symmetry, and great nice the possible of those tool hold it by face and press my lips to those teeth. I kiss those stony cheeks and those hold own evering, where once had burned the lights that flashed into my very soul.

Still holding the skull tightly clasped in my hands, I sink back into my celair.

Two mouths—two years—two centuries. It is alithe same.

Once more that strange feeling asserts itself upon me, and once more I give way to its pressure. I feel like one fascinated by a fatal charm. I lift my head. A strange picture haunts my gaze.

The dusty old office is shrunk into a long and narrow one. Two rows of seats line the sides and there are many, many windows, looking through which I behold rapidly shifting scenes. There are forests, meadows, a long stretch of sand with the sea beyond, and then the roofs and steeples of a great city. All pass so quickly before my eyes. Now I am in that great city. I see it all—the broofs and steeples of a great city. All pass shaded with palmettos, the earliages passing, the children playing under the trees, and above, the pale blue sky, Yes! yes! I remember I have called myself an invalid, and now in this look and the look and now in this look and the learned of the brush he found a big panther eating the brush he found a brush he found a

The Astoria Columbian says a drunken Indian woman on board the Telephone, the other day, threw into the river a sack of paper mail for Astoria, and that the mate refused to have the vessel stopped in order that the sack might be picked up.

The Modesto News says the estate of George H. Munson, who was killed in a railroad accident in New York about two months ago, has been looked after by an Eastern lawyer. The deceased left $10,000 worth of property in Stanisiaus County.

A five-year-old son of W. H. Papst was fatally hurt at Orland, Colusa County, last Sunday afternoon. He was playing with some companions trying to move a heavy iron frame used in a foundry, when it fell upon young Papst's back. He only lived a few hours.

When Secretary Gardiner of the Anaheim Irrigation District secured the 2850 bonds purpose of securing which the unnatural father is supposed to have committed the shocking crime.

John Kopp, Louis Smith and Albert Seafealt caught a strange fish on the sands of Upper Astoria, says the Pioneer. By fish-ermen it is known as a "lantern" fish, and its proper element is in the deep sea. Its peculiarity is its transparency; by holding it up to the light every bone can be easily counted. It has a reddish tinge and this one was about seven inches long, although they have been caught in drag-nets off the coast that were eighteen inches long. So far as known this is the first that has ever been caught in the Columbia.

Something new under the sun in the way of catastrophes is reported by the Hood River Glacier of that place. Mrs. Winans kept a pet kitten which was about one-third grown, and, after a brief visit in town, on returning home she found the kitten dead. An examination showed that a lizard was fast in the kitten's throat, its tail and hind legs being in vigorous motion in the effort to extricate itself. It is supposed the kitten caught the little saurian, which in its effort to escape made a dart down the kitten's throat, which, being too small for it, the

With skin as fair as a priceless pearl and ADMIRATION. How different it would be if her skin was covered with pimples and her complexion marred by an UCLY SALLOW TINCE.

Such defects cannot exist when that indispensable article to every young lady's toilet,

Is in daily use. This potent, but harmless purifying agent, banishes Blotches, Freekles and Tan from the skin and makes the dexion as beautiful as the pearly pink of FOR SALE BY DRUGGISTS GENERALLY.
