

Hunting Licenses Now Being issued

Unlawful to Shoot Game Without Proper Permit

Hunting licenses can now be secured at the office of the state game warden in the Capitol, or from the clerk of any board of county supervisors.

Before the new game law went into effect no one had to secure a license to hunt in Arizona. The good old days are passing and anyone who hunts now without a license is subject to fine and imprisonment.

A resident of Arizona is required to pay only fifty cents for a license to hunt big or small game. A non-resident must pay $25 for a license to hunt big game and $1 to hunt birds. Aliens are charged $100 for a permit to hunt big game and $25 for a bird license.

Each license carries various data concerning the holder thereof. His age, height, color of hair and color of eyes are given.

On the back of each license is the following information concerning seasons and limits:

Open seasons—Male deer and turkey, October 1 to December 15. Quail, snipe and rail, October 15 to February 1. Ducks, geese and brant, September 1 to April 1. Doves and white wings, June 1 to February 1. Trout, June 1 to September 1. Black bass, strawberry bass or crappie, September 1 to December 1. Any person who shall take any fish under seven inches in length, of any of the above varieties, is required to return such fish, as injured as possible, to the waters from which they were taken.

No open season—Antelope, elk, goat or mountain sheep, female deer, fawn, road-runner, bob-white grouse or pheasant.

Limit to each person—Two male deer per season; 25 quail per day; 25 ducks per day; 35 doves or white wings per day; 3 turkeys per season; 20 pounds of trout, bass, crappie or catfish, or 40 fish over seven inches in length, in one day.

Failure to comply with the above provisions is a misdemeanor under the law, punishable by fine or imprisonment.

Some of Duncan's Important Institutions

It is impossible for any community to reach the highest degree of civilization unless that community enjoys a liberal use of the telephone. The telephone has come to be recognized as one of the necessities of civilization.

What great possibilities it awakes! Think of the many vital transactions it has been sponsor for! How many shrewd men of business have taken advantage of its convenience for the transaction of profitable deals! Think of its calls, both sad and sweet, to the old home that we all love so well. How many happy marriages have been consummated through the medium of the obliging central girl! And that reminds us: The force of the Duncan Telephone Company is possessed of the politeness that every one has longed to see expressed. Mr. Collis, the methodical manager of the Duncan Telephone Company is a telephone man from the word "go." Any defect in the service of his company receives his immediate attention. Mr. Collis is a man in whom the confidence of the Duncan telephone users will never be misplaced. He handles a telephone that, for service the world has no equal; this telephone is the Chicago de Luxe. A lifetime guarantee goes with every one of these instruments. Mr. Collis intends to greatly enlarge the field, already large, of his telephone activities. It is safe to say that he will get the support of every citizen in the vicinity of Duncan. Without a doubt, he deserves such a support.

An institution of which any city could well be proud is The Bank of Duncan. From its very inception, under the leadership of H. M. Watson, this bank has enjoyed an era of unparalleled prosperity. That Mr. Watson built wisely and well is proven by the continued strength of this institution. No better memorial to the early years of manhood could be wished than the career of this necessity common to every community of any commercial significance. For the past few years this bank has enjoyed the efficient management of Mr. Lanneau, one of the rising young financiers of the Southwest. The stockholders of this institution are indeed fortunate in their selection of Mr. Lanneau as their representative of voice in their profitable investment. Not a depositor can be found who is unwilling to transfer his account to another place of safe keeping, unless unavoidable conditions demand an account in a bank of a more ancient location. Duncan is fortunate in the possession of Mr. Lanneau as the custodian of its funds.

An old adage is to the effect that the nearest way to a man's heart is through his inner paraphernalia, to politely express our meaning. In this connection it is well to state that the citizens of Duncan can be easily reached by any one who is willing to pay the moderate price charged by the proprietors of Duncan's sanitary meat markets. It is indeed refreshing to see the pleased look of the housewife as she surveys the juicy steaks, roasts and tasty meats of every kind, sort and condition, that are supplied by Duncan's obliging sellers of the toothsome products of Duncan's alfalfa and grain. This is to the many housewives who will soon come to Duncan: Before you ask a favor, in the way of pin money, feed that mere man about two pounds of the afore-said meat.

Somewhere in this old world we have heard of a man who once talked of "The cup that cheers." We have an opinion that this man, sometime in his life, stopped in Duncan. Now, this is why we think that Duncan once saw this man, or rather he saw Duncan: In the shops of some of our popular caterers, there can be found the necessary materials that cause a man to think of the sweetheart with whom he roamed the gardens of love in the days that are gone forever. He thinks, after the proper preparation, of the old front gate, where he plighted his word to the girl he loved. There come to his memory scenes of a happy childhood, when every day saw expressed his earnest desire to eat everything in sight; although biscuits on Sunday morning enjoining his greatest attention.

He thinks of the days when he for the first time, plucked enough courage to ask for his first kiss. He remembers the virgin blush of the dearest creature in the world, as she said, "I didn't know you liked me." He thinks of the little home where he carried his first wife, where the spring was down below, in the valley, where after a few weeks of married happiness, his waking thought was of the old coon dog, instead of the wife of his bosom. Bnt, oh pshaw, why recall those old scenes? Come to Duncan.

One of the best ways to judge the worth of any business is by the length of its existence. From that fact we conclude that the mercantile establishment conducted by Mr. Campbell is a strong one. For ten long and prosperous years Mr. Campbell has been engaged in the commercial life of Duncan. In his store can be found all the things that hungry man can possibly want. Mr. Campbell says that he has, and will, handle anything once. The people may be sure that what they want can be found at Campbell's store. Mr. Campbell is an old-timer in this region, being the man who started Safford, Arizona, where he at present owns valuable property. In addition to this property, he controls some of the richest land in the valley of the famous Gila. He runs a mill that produces the kind of flour and meal that makes the kind of bread that mother used to make.

The Methodist people of the Duncan vicinity are fondly proud of their young pastor, Rev. Dr. Acuff. Mr. Acuff is a worthy exponent of the liberal tendencies of the protestant churches of today. Mr. Acuff impresses one with the thoughts of a man of profound spiritual thought, combined with a great love for humanity. This young pastor is not content with the training gained by a course at one of the strongest colleges in the East, but is further preparing himself for his chosen work by a correspondence course at Vanderbilt University. His mind is set on the highest theological training that the best schools afford. Duncan is glad that he carries with us.

It is reported, by conservative business men of this whole section, that Duncan is soon to enjoy the advantages of a new railway. This is not childish gossip. It is on reliable authority that the present prosperity of our liberal city will soon witness the coming of a railway that will match its strength with the railway whose courteous and fair-minded officials have served us so long and well. We pledge our continued support to the tried and true highway, and a fresh enthusiasm to the new. Come to Duncan.

A merry crowd was that which gathered at one of Duncan's popular meeting places last Thursday morning. It was an assemblage of men capable of discussing any topic that could suggest itself to the mind of man. Mr. Parks entertained with his opinion of infant baptism; Mr. Tipton, for the edification of the crowd told them exactly how they could trisect the triangle; Mr. Clay expressed his thoughts concerning the origin of prenatal influence; Mr. Head said he would be hanged if he would sell his yearlings for less than $30.00: said he knew that was a good price for ordinary two-year-olds, but his yearlings were as good as any man's two-year-olds. Thus the conversation ranged from the heights of intellectuality, to the commonplace pleasures of the rest of us, who were good listeners. Come to Duncan.

A certain prominent business man of our town has confided to the Arizona that his heart is sad; all because of the fact that a heartless young man of Duncan is succeeding in his efforts to gain the hand of marriage of the store man's pretty salesgirl. When questioned, the lady whose happiness is at stake, refused to commit herself, but promised the questioner that he should have the order for the wedding cards. We admire this evidence of public spirit; listen, you men of Duncan will you be as generous with your printing.

One of our strongest business houses is that conducted by Mr. W. W. Wilkey. Mr. Wilkey's ambition is such that he is not content to carry the ordinary amount of stock; he is following the idea that is better to hold in stock every article that man can possibly need, from baby shoes to manure spreaders. Mr. Wilkey has just received a complete line of the most modern farming implements. This store is the successor of the Taylor Mercantile, Co. whose former manager, Mr. Taylor set a high-water mark in Duncan's commercial life.

What promises to be one of the most enjoyable social affairs of the waning winter season is the dance to be given at Hobbs Hall next Monday night, in honor of St. Patrick's Day. All of Duncan's sweet girls will be there to meet their pretty smiles upon the beaus of their choice.

The floormaster takes particular pains to see that the most perfect order is maintained at all dances held at this hall. But his task in that respect is easy, for the gallantry of the young men of Duncan is such that every man is upon his best behavior.

The Billingsley Mercantile establishment has a complete stock of the most improved farming implements of every description. These people have the fineness of judgment, gained through years of experience in this line, which enables them to know exactly the needs of the prosperous ranchers of the Duncan section. All honor to the commercial men of our town, who have the energy that enables them to supply the every need of the buyers of their community.

Mr. Clark, of the Clark Mercantile Company, is a practical business man, but in addition to this quality, he is an artistic sense that would cause envy in the breast of an Italian artist. We will submit the proof: Go to his well-stocked general merchandise store, and take an extended gaze at his new furniture. He has furniture of such
