CRUSHED

Once a poet wrote a sonnet All about a pretty bonnet, And a critic sat upon it, On the sonnet, Not the bonnet, Nothing loath,

And, as if it were high treason, Said: "Neither rhyme nor reason," Has it, And it's out of season," Which? The sonnet Or the bounet? Maybe both.

'Tis a feeble imitation Of a worthier creation, An aesthetic innovation Of a sounct. Or a bonnet. This was hard.

Both were put together neatly,
Harmonizing very sweetly,
But the critic crushed completely
Not the bonnet
Or the sonnet,
But the bard,

STUDIED IN PARIS.

There are several places in Paris which advertise that the persons who go there will be surrounded with all the salutary restraints and influences of home life and that there will be wholeome discipline to safeguard the young women from all the allurements and entanglements of the French capital. One of these homes was selected by Mrs. Jones for her daughter, partly because of the prospectus and partly cause Mrs. Jones' friend, Mrs. Smith, had sent her daughter to the home and was loud in her praises of the advantages Miss Smith had derived.

So Miss Jones went to this home on the Rue de la Pompe and prepared for a long course of study which was to fit her for a career on the grand opera stage. The work went on satisfactorily at the start. But Miss Jones is an American girl, with all the vivacity and attractiveness which are popularly supposed to be attributes of these girls. The life in the home had not been particularly pleasing to her in prospect, but she soon found that the reality was a great deal different from what had been advertised. She discovered first that apparently the greatest delicacy the French managers of the institution thought of was mutton—principally aged mutton. The result of this was that the girls were in the habit of going short of meals at the home and finding better ones for themselves in nearby restaurants. The knowledge that they could go out to these restaurants for their meals without restraint and without comment from the managers of the home led very quickly to a series of practical deceptions. If it was easy to go to a restaurant for a meal, it was just as easy to go somewhere else for something else

Everybody who is studying any art in Paris quickly becomes acquainted with a lot of other people who are studying the same art or another. Every singing master gives his musicales, every master of drawing, painting and sculpture gives his little receptions. The pupils meet, and it is impossible to prevent the young American women from meeting and becoming more or less well acquainted with various young and attractive men of artistic temperament who are also studying under Paris masters. That thing happened very quickly in the case of Miss Jones. She found that her friend, Miss Smith, had already formed some pleasing acquaint-ances, and, as Miss Smith's intimate chum, she almost immediately met the young man whose acquaintance finally sent her back to New York.

Miss Jones was particularly attractive. There was one young man among those to whom Miss Smith introduced her who, Miss Jones noticed, was particularly attractive to Miss Smith. Now this young man was the best of the lot, and his name was near enough to Arbuthnot to let it go at that. Miss Jones fancied Mr. Arbuthnot herself. Mr. Arbuthnot was very well acquainted with all the things in Paris which are worth seeing and with some things to which women who have gone from a home where they are surrounded "with all the restraints and safeguards of home life" were not supposed to be introduced. Mr. Arbuthnot also had a friend, Mr. Williams, who was very well versed in the ways of Paris, and between them they contrived to make the winter very entertaining, if a little hectic, for Miss Smith and her attractive friend, Miss Jones.

The conquest of Mr. Arbuthnot by Miss Jones proceeded gradually but very steadily, until early in the new year it produced almost an open rupture between Miss Jones and Miss Smith. The quarrel interrupted rather seriously the gay course which the four had been pursuing, but it did not put a stop to it entirely. It was easy enough for each of the girls to associate with herself other young women who were living at the institution on the Rue de la Pompe and so to make no serious break in their round of gayeties.

By the middle of February the annexation of Mr. Arbuthnot to Miss Jones was so complete that the warfare was conducted in the open. The whole institution on the Rue de la Pompe knew about it, and the girls wagered gloves and candy on the outcome, long as the warfare was conducted in the open Miss Jones maintained her ascendancy rather easily, largely be-cause of her superior attractiveness. So the wily Miss Smith resorted to subterfuge and strategy. One morning in March Mrs. Jones in New York received & cable message from Paris. It said:

Amelia ill. Doctor thinks better come

"Babe" was the nickname of Miss Jones' once intimate friend, Miss Smith. Mrs. Jones was shocked almost into nervous prostration. Mrs. Jones sent word posthaste to her daughter's guardian, who is a physician. The doctor told Mrs. Jones to cable at once for the symptoms of Amelia's illness and to prepare to start for Paris the next day. Mrs. Jones cabled as the doctor had directed and received this reply:

Symptoms impossible. Doctor says come at mee. Better take steamer tomorrow.

Bann. This cablegram frightened Mrs. Jones

more than ever. The dector guardian was inclined to regard the message in the same light. But he still insisted on knowing the symptoms. So they cabled knowing the symptoms. So they capled again a peremptory demand for symptoms and meanwhile pushed preparations for Mrs. Jones' departure. Just as Mrs. Jones was leaving her house the next morning to go to the steamer the result to her second cable was band-the reply to her second cable was handed to her. It said: Advanced stage tuberculosis. Both lungs hopelessly affected. Condition serious. Come at once.

On reading this message Mrs. Jones nearly collapsed. The doctor ejaculated a large, vehement exclamation and declared that the Paris doctor who had made the diagnosis was an eternal and everlasting and utterly blanked blanked idiot. He had seen Miss Jones him-self and had exaimned her thoroughly before she sailed, and there was not the slightest symptom of affection of the lungs at that time, and it was absolutely impossible for tuberculosis to reach an advanced stage in the time in which she had been abroad. He was half inclined to suspect that there was some-thing wrong in the cablegram, but there was no time then to go behind the re-turns, and the only thing to do was for Mrs. Jones to go on.

Mrs. Jones said that she never in her life had such a voyage as that trip was. The weather was just as rough as March could make it, but Mrs. Jones did not suffer a minute from seasickness. If she could only have been thoroughly sea-sick, she said, it might have relieved her a little from the agony and sus-pense which she endured. She got into Southampton nearly a day late. The first thing Mrs. Jones heard when the ship reached her dock was her own name bawled lustily by a man who had just come on deck. It was another telegram, and it took all the strength and grit she had to open it. She confidently expected to read that her daughter was dead, but instead she read:

Amelia much better. Will meet you at the station with a red ribbon in my left button-hole.

WILLIAMS.

"Now, who," said Mrs. Jones to her-"is Williams?"

Williams had never appeared in the proceedings before. She had never heard of him in any letters from her daughter, but she supposed, of course, that he was some attache of the institution where her daughter was living. She hurried across to Paris and got there late in the evening. Williams met her all right and assured her that her daughter was really quite comfortable. They drove out to the home on the Rue de la Pompe as fast as the cabman could go and got there just in time to meet Miss Jones coming home from the opera with Mr. Arbuthnot.

There was a row—a good, fair, square, ablebodied American row—and the managers of that institution heard for once what a plain spoken American woman wrapped up in her daughter thought about that way of conducting things. Of course the whole thing came out. Miss Jones had had a cold and had been in bed for a couple of days with it. Miss Smith had taken advantage of the opportunity to scare Mrs. Jones nearly to death, having decided to brave the inevitable exposure because she was sure of the result. She was not at all disappointed. Mrs. Jones declared that her daughter and she had had enough of Paris and Parisian methods, and if Amelia wanted to study music any longer, she could come straight home and do it.—New York Sun.

Pennsylvania Surnames

The United States offers peculiar interest in this field, owing to the changes undergone by foreign names in their new environment. Of course New England names, being merely the transplanting of English originals, offer on-ly the interest of ordinary orthographical and orthoepical variations, but even here there are many phenomena which would well repay investigation. The richest field, however, of this sort is offered by Dutch and German surnames, the former being found mainly in New York and the latter in Pennsylvania. It is with the latter that this paper has to do.

During the eighteenth century between 50,000 and 100,000 Germans and Swiss settled in the southern counties of Pennsylvania. Their descendants today number hundreds of thousands. What has been the fate of their names? We may assume, on a priori grounds, that scarcely 1 in 100 has remained un-changed. When, how, on what princi-ple, were these changes made? These questions suggest exceedingly interesting problems to the investigator.

At the beginning of the last century the law itself of Pennsylvania interfered, and all Germans who received a grant of public lands were required to anglicize their names. But of course the most potent influence at work was the natural objection to the inconvenience arising from having names which others could with difficulty spell or pronounce,-Lippincott's Magazine,

Professor Drummond's Last Days.

The last days of Professor Drummond seem to have been extremely pathetic. He was quite helpless and had to be wheeled about in a bath chair. Only when visited by intimate friends and colleagues did he manifest any of his buoyant spirit and sparkling wit. His old friends, Professor G. A. Smith and Dr. Stalker, were very attentive to him. When the latter was leaving him on the occasion of his last visit, Drummond gave the doctor a portrait of himself seated in the bath chair, under which he had written "The Descent of The pathos of these words affected the doctor deeply.-Christian Com-

of the oddest and laziest creatures in the world. It walks upside down. It rarely, if ever, drinks and it is said to feel no pain. The animal is known as the ai, from its peculiar piping cry, or the three toed sloth. The last name is very appropriate, for a lazier animal never lived. Often it takes less than 50 steps a day, and it will be a month or more in going a mile. It is not necessary for it to go any faster, because it lives in the trees, and its food of leaves and soft twigs is always within easy reach. Sloths have three toes on each foot, and each toe bears a strong booked claw. When the sloth moves, he simply hooks the claws over a limb and crawls about from tree to tree. In this position he can sleep hours at a time. When a little sloth is born, it uses its mother for a hammock until it is big enough to climb for itself.

The sloth grows to be about two feet long. Its hair is wiry and coarse and it has no tail to speak of. The natives say that it cannot feel pain, and they prove what they say by showing how the sloth will roll itself up and deliberately fall out of a tall tree in order to save climbing down.—Chicago Record.

The Solar Parallax.

It is not infrequently a matter of wonder with those not versed in all the phenomena of astronomy that the solar parallax can be got from Mars and Venus, but not from Mercury or the sun itself. Astronomers explain this on very simple grounds—namely, that the nearest approach of these bodies to the earth is for Mars 33,874,000 miles, for Venus 23,654,000 miles, for Mercury 47,935,000 miles, and for the sun 91,239,000 miles. Consequently for us Mars and Venus have very much larger parallaxes than Mercury or the sun, and, of course, the larger the parallax the easier it is to measure. But, further, even the largest of these parallax-es must be determined within far less than one-tenth of a second of the truth, and while that degree of accuracy is possible in measuring short arcs it is quite unattainable in long ones. one of the most essential conditions for the successful measurement of parallaxthe near body with that of a more distant one situated in the same region of the sky. - New York Sun.
