

HELEN KELLER TO BROADCAST VOICE TOMORROW NIGHT

The voice of Helen Keller, created by herself after years of patient effort, will be radiated across the Pacific ocean Saturday night, June 13, at 11:50 o'clock, and heard by millions on the other side of the earth. This feat will be accomplished by the world's most remarkable blind and deaf woman speaking softly before a microphone in the San Francisco studio of KGO, the General Electric Pacific coast station.

Recent practice before KGO microphones showed that Helen Keller's voice over radio was even more distinct than when coming through the air direct from her mouth. While speaking she touched the vibrating discs of radio head phones and felt the rhythmic pulsations of her own voice. Her sensitive fingers even detected the difference between speech and music. When her name was pronounced three times over the air she recognized it twice, saying with KGO announcer, "Helen Keller, Helen Keller." With her face beaming she declared: "It will help me to speak!" Sounds like "d," "e," "b," she said, "felt" much alike to her. But with practice it was said she believed a difference might be detected. Several years ago, at the suggestion of Thomas A. Edison, Helen Keller began practicing talking into a small cedar box, feeling the vibrating wood, in her struggle to form mental pictures of different sounds and then make the sounds herself. Just the small practice in the KGO studios, it was declared, improved her voice, giving it more natural rhythmic qualities.

Owing to the difference in time, listeners on the other side of the earth will hear Helen Keller's voice in the evening of the day before she speaks at KGO. However, it was explained by engineers, the actual energy radiated from the KGO antenna will reach Australia, 8,000 miles distant, in one-fifth of the time between the ticks of a watch.

Ann Sullivan Macy, life-long friend and teacher of Helen Keller, also will be heard. She will tell the story of Helen Keller's life, and explain how she taught her to understand "the swaying of trees," "the strength of a lion," and many other interesting things, seemingly impossible to communicate to a person who could neither hear, see, or, at the time, speak a word.

One-Man Meeting of Junior C. C. Held in Nogales by Mr. Healy

Arizona's first "one-delegate convention" was held at Nogales when Joe Healy, representing the Casa Grande Junior Chamber of Commerce, returned to his home after a three-day session there.

Healy went to Nogales Saturday expecting to represent Casa Grande in a first state conference of junior chambers of commerce. Arriving there, he learned that the other chambers had indefinitely postponed their visits to the border city. So Healy conducted a convention of his own. He met at the Firemen's club Saturday afternoon, called himself to order and, after an address delivered by himself to himself, he adjourned to reconvene ten minutes later at Nogales, Sonora.

Late Sunday afternoon the one-man convention met again and elected officers for the ensuing year. Healy was named to head the organization by a unanimous vote. On Monday the final session was held, Nogales being unanimously selected as the next meeting place.
