New Styles and Fancies to Make Fair the Fair Sex.

SOMETHING PRETTY AND UNIQUE

Down with the Bloom of Hills and Heather—Things as a Feature—Thanksgiving Party Gowns and Some from a Fifth Avenue Dressmaker.

Nowadays it is hard to say which is the most gorgeous and glistening—the shop windows or the women they lure inside. The window-teams with heavy, shaggy stuffs for street wear—camel's hair, soft as velvet, sheeny as silk, frizzes and chevrons with the bloom of Scotch hills and heathery overlays their grounds of brown or gray or olive. They are new—what is better, they are so much so that you recognize them at once as the textile expression of a new and beautiful thought. There is wonderful individuality in the ground colors. The grays are cold or warm or demure or freakish, the browns run the gauntlets betwixt the sorrowful dead leaf tint and the peppy joyousness of gold color, as the angry flames of burnt orange. Many are overlaid with splashes and blotches either contrasting or harmonizing with the ground. Others show rings, stripes or broad uneven patches of deep blue or deeper red.

Among the most striking was a blue cheviot bound with tawny orange, lately chosen for a new bride's going-away gown. A vest of dull blue silk was let into the plain close-fitting round bodice, over which the close bell-skirt fastened. Bishop sleeves of the cheviot gathered full into a loose waistband pass easily up and down over the tight blue silk undersleeves.

The bishop sleeve, by the way, is fashion's latest caprice, and ever so much more fashionable than the bell sleeve of the recent past. It is perfectly straight, deeply rounded at the top, gathered very full in the armhole and at the wrist into a band big enough to slip easily over the hand and forearm. Underneath it fashion decrees a tight coat sleeve of either a contrasting or harmonizing color.

Very many such were seen at the horse show. It is ancient history now, but all the fashionable world and his wife were on dress parade, so it is worth while to tell of the gowns. One ornament of the Four Hundred was no end stylish in a gown of gray cloth, made as a long blouse, with big outside pockets and rows of enameled buttons that might have been heirlooms and were certainly works of art. The blouse fastened over a handsome white waistcoat, worn with tiny real jewels, each in its separate setting upon a tiny spiral spring. The hat was of black felt with upstanding black velvet loops and a bird with outstretched wings. A gown even more notable had a beige ground with ring pattern of moonlight blue upon it. The mauve skirt had a border of shaggy marmot fur. In front there was a coquille of moonlight blue velvet heavily embroidered in gold, and at the back of the neck a bow of moonlight

A THOMAS GOWN.

Blue velvet ribbon whose ends reached quite to the hem. There were perhaps a dozen hunter's green with sable trimming variously applied. That is indeed quite the combination of the minute—though all sorts of shaggy and curly furs are high in favor as trimming.

Now is a damsel gorgeous in dull red and yellow taw—so much so indeed that she recalled an autumn forest. The bell skirt of shaggy red cloth had at the foot three stout tufts of velvet just matching its color. A puff of the same velvet hid the junction of waist and skirt. The bodice was the richest golden tan with jeweled passementerie wrought upon the stuff. The bodice was a wreath of ostrich tips, shading from red to yellow-brown, with scintillant opalines flashing from each feather stem.

This bonnet is among the most stylish of the season. In shape it is the ever favorite toque. The stuff is cadet blue velvet but in long folds around the edge, slightly puffed over the forehead and caught in there with a bit of costly velvet. Over the velvet lies a wreath of rock feathers, also cadet blue, running up and down and edged with out brilliant. At the back three upright quills likewise bespangled, some prince of Wales plumes and loops of cadet blue velvet, out of which come the strings to pass double under the chin. Another prince of Wales cluster comes down and rests lightly upon the yellow hair. Her companion, one of the fresh, wholesome brown-eyed girls who always develop into fine women, smiles at you from under a big black velvet hat with an irregular soft brim whose curves are wonderfully picturesque, and more wonderfully feathery. The trimming is just a big, soft bow of broad ribbon velvet, and six of the new mushroom tips shading from white to golden yellow.

Street gowns are severely simple. If fit and finish do not give style, none is possible. For the most part they have coats whose skirts reach to the knee. Dress skirts are narrow and close-fitting—in fact molded to the figure at top, with a sudden amplitude at the foot. The only permissible trimming is a wide border of fur, or several narrow ones, or else a row of passementerie.

But such passementerie nobody ever quite saw before. Fancy wide, golden meshes sown with seed pearls, with pale emerald nail-heads, or those that flash out to you the luster of aquamarine. Imagine it catching down draperies of creamy-white crepe de chine, and you will get some idea of the gown worn at a Thanksgiving night party at a country house, when its blonde owner set several hearts a tremble. For she bound her golden hair with ropes of real pearls, and enwrapped her milk-white throat with the same perfect jewels. Even her tiny slippers—she is a second Cinderella—were powdered with the white drapery that might be fairy tears made immortal. Another gem which upon the same occasion enhanced the charms of her brunette dearest foe is of blue-green silver-spangled tulle made with the suspicion of a fan train over blue-green shot silk. At foot the skirt has an enormously full tulle ruche with a row of stamless pink roses through the center. The same trimming, but smaller, outlined the low neck. On either shoulder there was a big, real lace butterfly, and a third hovered over the roses above in beauty's hair. Another gem was of yellow silk, hand wrought, with pink orchids and yellow jeweled centers.

One of this autumn's brides, who wedding gowns are now a-making on

AT THE ASTOR TEA.

Fifth avenue, has decided to make their linings, instead of an accessory, a feature. They are all silk, of course. Sometimes they harmonize, oftener they contrast vividly with the stuff they accompany. For instance, a reception gown of black royale is lined, waist and skirt, with exquisite old-rose satin. A rough cloth, whose olive surface is blotched with a tint that looks like nothing so much as an autumn leaf in which frost has left but the ghost of its scarlet flame, has for its lining a light of the same tender color. A water green silk is lined with palest sea-shell pink, a yellow that glows like live sunshine shows inside something that recalls a mauve veil laid lightly over the heart of a silver pink rose.

This same lovely bride has a gown or two worth a paragraph—even as to their outside. For example, a morning gown of the richest clear red wool, so fine and close of wool that it puts satin to the blush. It is cut to sit close in the back with a demi-train edged with a silken quilting exactly matching its color. The front is of soft, thick ribbed gray silk, with triple clustered stripes of white and red. It is gathered full into a broad gray collar and shirred in diamond pattern to the shape of the bust. Over this the red wool falls in long jacket fronts that reach quite to the foot.

At an early tea, given to one of the Astor family a few days after the birth of the young heir, who is said to have his mother's hands and hair, with Astor features, one of the guests was thus gowned. She sat near the tea-table in a high carved mahogany chair, a perfect picture of the grand dame de la siecle. Her gown was of the richest fawn corded silk, made with deep folded vest that was fastened at the waist with a belt of jet and gold embroidery. Embroidery to match ran around collar, wrists and skirt above a deep band of beaver fur. She wore, likewise, a half-fitting vest of beaver-colored velvet. In front of her stood a young woman who could almost discount the glories of King Solomon. Her gown was heliotrope cloth, with shaded metal embroidery in gold, silver and copper. It fell at the back in a demi-train, and opened in front over an under-dress of the richest stamped velvet in Louis XV. patterns. The toque was of cloth and velvet to match. Altogether, she was a mighty impressive testimony to the dress-makers' high art.

THE STATION DESPAIR.

We must trust the conductor, most surely. Way millions of millions before. Have made this same journey a score. And come to that ultimate shore. And we, we will reach it in season. And ah, what a welcome is there! Better then, how out of all reason. To stop at the station Despair.

At midnight and many a pillion. Of little black water have we. As we journey from ocean to ocean. From sea until ultimate shore. To that deep sea of sea, and all things. Of passion, concern and of care. That vast sea of Eden set islands. Don't stop at the station Despair!

Go forward, whatever may follow. Go forward, friendless, or alone. As we, to leap off in some hollow. Or for, in the night and darkness. Leap off like a thief, try to hide you. From angels, all waiting you there! Go forward, whatever betide you. Don't stop at the station Despair! —Joachim Miller, in N. Y. Independent.

GREATEST OF THE THREE

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Miller of No. 455 Jefferson avenue, were the recipients of a genuine surprise party Friday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Miller leave soon for Belding where Mr. Miller will take charge of a hotel.

The dancing club which was organized four years ago principally through the efforts of Mrs. Morris Cascard, who was then Miss Waters, will reassemble December 31st Hartman's small hall for an evening's pleasure and to open the season with a hop. Braun's orchestra will probably be engaged for the season as usual, and it is hoped to continue the parties as they have been during previous winters. This club may be known as the old dancing club or dancing club No. 1, and must not be identified with the new club which has taken the same name and meets at the same place December 10. The two clubs are distinct organizations, though both are composed of prominent young society people.

Over one hundred couples attended the Thanksgiving hop given Thursday night at the armory by the Misses Gage and Benedict.

The Misses Waterbury of Kalamazoo gave a card party Monday evening in honor of Miss Ethel Quimby who was the guest of Miss Burnham.

The "Silent Sixteen" club will meet Monday evening at Simmons' hall and elect officers for the coming year. Their first hop will be given in about three weeks.

Miss Fannie Wilcox's married people's dancing class met Friday evening at Simmons' Hall. The club though not recently organized has a membership of seventy-four couples and the following new members were present: Messrs. and Mesdames Dr. Robinson, J. M. Wilcox, Fred Barber, J. M. Otto, D. L. Campau, J. E. Phillips, W. L. Johnson, J. A. L. Curtis, W. J. Russell, W. S. Pratt, F. K. Haberborn, Chas. L. Wilson. Excellent music was in attendance and a very enjoyable evening was spent.

Mr. and Mrs. Duttmer entertained the Burlington Pedro club Monday evening at their home, corner of Central avenue and Pleasant street. Mrs. W. J. Russell won the ladies' first prize, a set of silver fruit knives. The gentlemen's first prize was won by John D. Curtis. Mrs. D. L. Campau took the booby, a glass fruit dish, and C. D. Sloum contented himself with a china plate because he won a few games.

Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey Guest, of No. 31 Lake street, entertained the Lantern pedro club Wednesday evening. Mrs. S. H. Sweet won the ladies' first prize, a pretty pink lamp. Mr. J. A. Wilson won the gentlemen's first prize, a blue lamp. Booby prizes, a red and a green toy lantern filled with perfume were won by Mrs. Wilson and Mr. Bechtel. The club, which was recently organized, has the following officers: President, Mr. Chauncey Guest; vice president, Mrs. A. D. Green; secretary, W. T. Wilson; treasurer, Miss Gertrude Anderson. Meetings will be held every two weeks at the homes of the members. Mr. and Mrs. Sweet, of Henry street, will entertain the club Wednesday, December 3.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Armitage entertained the Neighborhood pedro club Tuesday evening. Mr. and Mrs. David Forbes were fortunate in securing the first prize and Mr. and Mrs. McNabb managed to retain the consolation prizes in the family.

Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. John Hicken of No. 636 Cherry street, observed the anniversary of Mr. Hicken's birth by entertaining a party of fifty guests at progressive pedro. Miss McKay and Mr. John Newhouse won first prizes, and Miss Susie Newhouse and Mr. Hoskens took the consolation gifts.

Mr. A. S. Goodman entertained a company of eight bachelor friends at dinner Thanksgiving day at his home, No. 68 Ransom street. The guests were Messrs. S. S. Corl, Heber Knott, Huber Northrup, John H. Wheeler, Charles McQueen, Fred. A. Twamley, W. N. Corl and W. J. Deppen. Mrs. Goodman is in Germany.

Miss Della Orven of Lake avenue gave a 6 o'clock dinner Thanksgiving day. Covers were laid for thirty. Cards, dancing and music contributed to the evening's pleasure.

General L. G. Rutherford ate a game dinner with Mr. J. W. Rosenthal and family. Mr. Rosenthal took the game himself.

Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Dibble entertained the Young People's pedro club Wednesday evening, at their home, No. 94 Lagrange street.

MATRIMONIAL.

Barbour-May.

Mr. Harry E. Barbour and Miss Nellie May Beede were married Wednesday evening at the home of the bride's parents, No. 197 First avenue, the Rev. H. A. McIntyre officiating. Miss Bertha Barbour was the maid of honor and Mr. Ed. W. Cowlishaw was the groom's best man. Between one and two hundred guests were present and the event was a happy one. Many beautiful gifts were presented and the young couple start on life's journey under the most favorable auspices. They will not take a trip at present but are at home to their friends at No. 103 First avenue. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Botsford of Dor.

Wednesday evening Mr. Walter Van Keuren and Miss Ada Lulu Sherk were married at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. A. J. Dayton, No. 674 Wealthy avenue. The Rev. John Heritage officiating. They will be at home at No. 91 Baxter street after December 10.

Dr. H. Robinson of Chicago and Miss Mabel Bassett were married Wednesday morning at the residence of the bride's parents, No. 68 Colfax street, by the Rev. W. A. Frye. They left immediately for the ceremony for their future home in Chicago.
