The CALL of the WITH ILLUSTRATIONS FROM PHOTOGRAPHS

CHAPTER I.

Close to the serried backbone of the ered above a creek called Misery was came. pointed and edged with emerald tracmore than an hour yet, but below, along in a chorus of tiny cascades, the nestness. light was already thickening into a reach his fingertips, towered above the stream, with a gnarled scrub oak clinging tenaciously to its apex. Loftily on both sides climbed the mountains cloaked in laurel and timber.

Suddenly the leafage was thrust and a shy, half-wild girl appeared in the opening. For an instant she halt- of a brain dulled into coma, ed, with her brown fingers holding back the brushwood, and raised her face as though listening. As she stood with the toes of one bare foot twisting in the gratefully cool moss stood for a moment with one hand on she laughed with the sheer exhilara the dripping walls of rock, looking out, unguided, would become impostion of life and youth, and started out down while her hair fell about her on the table top of the huge rock, face. But there she halted suddenly with a she shifted the doubled body into a startled exclamation and drew instinctively back. What she saw might well have astonished her, for it was a thing she had never seen before and of which she had never heard. Finally, reassured by the silence, she slipped across the broad face of the flat rock for a distance of twenty-five feet and | blow on the head, where a bruise was paused again to listen.

At the far edge lay a pair of saddlebags, such as form the only practical equipment for mountain travelers. Near them lay a tin box, littered with small and unfamiliar-looking tubes of plaque was a painter's sketching palette was a thing which she could not know, since the ways of artists had to do with a world as remote from her own as the life of the moon or stars. It was one of those vague mysteries that made up the wonderful life of "down below." Why had these things been left here in such confuowned them he would doubtless return to claim them. She crept over eves and ears alert, and slipped around to the front of the queer tripod, with all her muscles poised in readiness for

A half-rapturous and utterly astonished cry broke from her lips. She stared a moment, then dropped to the moss-covered rock, leaning back on her brown hands and gazing intently. "Hit's purty!" she approved, in a low, musical murmur. "Hit's plumb.

dead beautiful!"

Of course it was not a finished pic ture-merely a study of what lay before her-but the hand that had placed these brush strokes on the academy board was the sure, deft hand of a master of landscape, who had caught the splendid spirit of the thing and fixed it immutably in true and glowing appreciation. Who he was: where he had gone: why his work stood there unfinished and abandoned, were details which for the moment this half-savage child-woman forgot to question. She was conscious only of a sense of revelation and awe. Then she saw other boards, like the one upon the easel, piled near the paint box. These were dry, and represented the work of other days; but they were all pictures of her own mountains, and in each of them, as in this one, was something that made her heart leap. To her own people these steep hillsides and "coves" and valleys were matter of course. In their stony soil they labored by day, and in their shadows slept when work was done. Yet someone had discovered that they held a picturesque and rugged beauty; that they were not merely steep fields where the plow was useless and the hoe must be used. She must tell Samson-Samson, whom she held in an artless exaltation of hero worship; Samson, who was so "smart" that he hand and relaxed with a twinge of exthought about things beyond her un- treme pain. The color, which had bederstanding; Samson, who could not gun to creep back into his cheeks, left only read and write, but speculate on them again, and his lips compressed problematical matters.

Suddenly she came to her feet with clamation of suffering. a swift-darting impulse of alarm. Her ear had caught a sound. She cast nounced the young woman, quietly, searching glances about her, but the tangle was empty of humanity. The water still murmured over the rocks self and behaved stoically it would undisturbed. There was no sign of have been mere matter of course; but human presence, other than herself, her eyes mirrored a pleased surprise that her eyes could discover—and yet at the stranger's good-natured nod and to hate for Samson, should he have to her ears came the sound again, and his quiet refusal to give expression proved recreant to the mission of rethis time more distinctly. It was the to pain. It relieved her of the necessound of a man's voice, and it was sity for contempt. moaning as if in pain. She rose and earched vainly through the bushes of "that I've been a great deal of trouble the billside where the rock ran out to you."

OF SCENES IN THE PLAY from the woods. She lifted her skirts and splashed her feet in the shallow creek water, wading persistently up Cumberland ridge through a sky of and down. Her shyness was forgotten. mountain clarity, the sun seemed hesi- The groan was a groan of a human tating before its descent to the hori- creature in distress, and she must find The sugar-loaf cone that tow- and succor the person from whom it

COPYRIGHT & COMPANY

Certain sounds are baffling as to diery where the loftiest timber thrust rection. A voice from overhead or its crest plumes into the sun. On broken by echoing obstacles does not the hillsides it would be light for readily betray its source. Finally she stood up and listened once more inwhere the waters tossed themselves tently-her attitude full of tense ear-

"I'm shore a fool," she announced, cathedral gloom. Down there the "fur- half aloud. "I'm shore a plumb fool." riner" would have seen only the rough Then she turned and disappeared in course of the creek between moss- the deep cleft between the gigantic velveted and shaded bowlders of bowlder upon which she had been sittitanic proportions. The native would ting and another-small only by comhave recognized the country road in parison. There, ten feet down, in a these tortuous twistings. A great block narrow alley littered with ragged of sandstone, to whose summit a man stones, lay the crumpled body of a standing in his saddle could scarcely man. It lay with the left arm doubled under it, and from a gash in the forehead trickled a thin stream of blood. Also, it was the body of such a man as she had not seen before.

Although from the man came a low groan mingled with his breathing, it aside from above by a cautious hand, was not such a sound as comes from fully conscious lips, but rather that Freed from her fettering excess of shynese by his condition, the girl stepped surely from foothold to foothold until she reached his side. She Then, dropping to her knees. leaning posture, straightened the limbs, and began exploring with efficlent fingers for broken bones.

She had found the left arm limp above the wrist, and her fingers had diagnosed a broken bone. But unconsclousness must have come from the already blackening, and a gash still trickled blood.

She lifted her skirt and tore a long coat. Then she picked her bare-footed half-hour." way swiftly to the creek bed, where soft metal, all grotesquely twisted and she drenched the cloth for bathing and stained, and beside the box was a bandaging the wound. When she had strangely shaped plaque of wood done what she could by way of first an' light out." She turned, and with smeared with a dozen hues. That this aid she sat supporting the man's shoulders and shook her head dubiously.

Finally the man's lids fluttered and his lips moved. Then he opened his eyes.

"Hello!" said the stranger, vaguely. derstanding smile, and the girl, fighting hard the shy impulse to drop his shoulders and flee into the kind masking of the bushes, was in a measure reassured.

Breathing.

"You must hev fell offen the rock," she enlightened. "I think I might have fallen into worse circumstances," replied the un-

"I reckon you kin set up after a little."

"Yes, of course," The man suddenly realized that although he was quite comfortable as he was he could scarcely expect to remain permanently in the support of her bent arm. He attempted to prop himself on his hurt themselves tightly to bite off an ex-

"Thet air left arm air busted," an-

"Ye've got ter be heedful." Had one of her own men hurt him

"I'm afraid," apologized the painter,

Her lips and eyes were sober as she

"I reckon thet's all right," "And what's worse, I've got to be more trouble. Did you see anything of a brown mule?"

She shook her head. "He must have wandered off. May ask to whom I am indebted for this fret aid to the injured?"

"I don't know what ye means." rocks and sat near by, looking into his face with almost disconcerting steadiness: her solemn-pupiled eyes were unblinking, unsmiling. "Why, I mean who are you?" he laughed. "I hain't nobody much. I jest lives over you.

"But," insisted the man, "surely you have a name."

She nodded. "Hit's Sally."

"Then, Miss Sally, I want to thank

Once more she nodded, and, for the first time, let her eyes drop, while she sat nursing her knees. Finally she glanced up and asked with plucked-up

"Stranger, what mout yore name

"Lescott-George Lescott." "How'd ye git hurt?"

He shook his head. "I was painting-up there," he said;

the canvas and forgot where the edge was. I stepped too far."

The man rose to his feet, but he tot. The hoe he left where it stood. tered and reeled against the wall of ragged stone. The blow on his head down again.

"I'm afraid," he ruefully admitted, from your hospital." "You jest set where yer at." The girl rose and pointed up the mountainside. "I'll light out across the hill and fotch Samson an' his mule." "Who and where is Samson?" he en into darkness, and that the way sible. "It sounds like the name of a strong man.' "I means Sameon South," she enlightened, as though further description of one so celebrated would be redundant. "He's over thar 'bout threequarters.

"Three-quarters of a mile?" She nodded. What else could three-uarters mean? "How long will it take you?" he asked.

She deliberated. "Samson's hoein' "You can't do it in a half-hour, can you?"

"I'll jest take my foot in my hand, evening. a nod was gone.

At last she came to a point where a clearing rose on the mountainside stripped off to make way for a fencedin and crazily tilting field of young corn. High up and beyond, close to "I seem to have—" He broke off, and the bald shoulders of sandstone which his lips smiled. It was a friendly, un- threw themselves against the sky, was the figure of a man. As the girl halted the foot of the field, at. from her exertions, he was sitting on on the outstretched panorama below speaking, a man. His age was per- tal jigsaw puzzle. haps twenty. He sat loose-jointed and against the rails, rested a repeating told you that the truce in the "South-Hollman war" had been unbroken for two years, and that no clansman need in these halcyon days go armed affeld.

CHAPTER II.

Sally clambered lightly over the fence and started on the last stage of abouts." her journey, the climb across the young corn rows. It was a field stood on end, and the hoed ground was uneven; but with no seeming of wearlness her red dress flashed steadfastly across the green spears, and her voice was raised to shout: "Hello, Samson!"

The young man looked up and waved a languid greeting. He did not remove his hat or descend from his place of rest, and Sally, who expected no such attention, came smilingly on. Samson was her hero. Slow of utterance and diffident with the stranger, words now came fast and fluently as she told her story of the man who lay hurt at the foot of the rock. "Hit hain't long now tell sundown, she urged. "Hurry, Samson, an' git vore mule. I've done give him my promise ter fotch ye right straight back."

Samson took off his hat, and tossed the heavy lock upward from his forehead. His brow wrinkled with doubts. "What sort of lookin' feller air he?"

While Sally sketched a description. the young man's doubt grew graver. 'This hain't no fit time ter be takin' in folks what we hain't acquainted with," he objected. In the mountains any time is the time to take in strangers unless there are secrets to be guarded from outside eyes. "He's hurt. We kain't leave him layin' thar, kin we?" Suddenly her eyes caught sight of the rifle leaning near by, and straightway they filled with apprehension. Her militant love would have turned prisal in which he was biding his time, yet the coming of the day when the truce must end haunted her thoughts. box. Then, while Sally turned and claimed: "Oh, mother, look at the She came close, and her voice sank with her sinking heart,

"What air hit, Samson? What spoke slowly and diffidently. fer hev ye fotched yer gun ter the

The boy laughed. "Oh, hit ain't nothin' pertic'ler," he reassured. "Hit hain't nothin' fer a gal ter fret herself erbout, only I kinder suspicions strangers jest now."

"Air the truce busted?" She put the question in a tense, deep-breathed She had propped him against the whisper, and the boy replied casually. almost indifferently.

"No, Sally, hit hain't jest ter say busted, but 'pears like hit's right smart cracked. I reckon, though," he added in half-disgust, "nothin' won't come of hit."

Somewhat reassured, she bethought herself again of her mission.

"This here furriner hain't got no harm in him, Samson," she pleaded. and powerful. 'He 'pears ter be more like a gal than a man. He's real puny. He's got white skin and a bow of ribbon on his neck-an' he paints pictchers." The boy's face had been hardening with contempt as the description advanced, but at the last words a glow their number. came to his eyes, and he demanded almost breathlessly: "Paints pictchers? How do ye know

"I seen 'em. He was paintin' one when he fell offen the rock and busted his arm. It's shore es beautiful es-" and I guess I got too absorbed in the she broke off, then added with a sudwork. I stepped backward to look at den peal of laughter-"es er pictcher." The young man slipped down from the fence, and reached for the rifle.

"I'll git the nag," he announced briefly, and swung off without further had left him faint and dizzy. He sat parley toward the curling spiral of smoke that marked a cabin a quarter of a mile below. Ten minutes later that I'm not quite ready for discharge his bare feet swung against the ribs of a gray mule and his rifle lay balanced across the unsaddled withers. Sally sat mountain fashion behind him, facing straight to the side.

So they came along the creek bed and into the sight of the man who inquired. He realized that the bot- still sat propped against the mossy tom of the valley would shortly thick- rock. As Lescott looked up he closed the case of his watch and put it back into his pocket with a smile.

"Snappy work, that!" he called out. 'Just thirty-three minutes. I didn't believe it could be done."

Samson's face was masklike, but as he surveyed the foreigner, only the ingrained dictates of the country's hospitable code kept out of his eyes a gleam of scorn for this frail member of a sex which should be stalwart. "Howdy?" he said. Then he added suspiciously: "What mout yer husiness be in these parts, stranger?"

Lescott gave the Odyssey of his wancorn in the fur hill field. He'll her derings, since he had rented a mule strip of cotton from her single petti- ter cotch his mule. Hit mout tek a at Hixon and ridden through the country, sketching where the mood prompted and sleeping wherever he found a officer. The cortege remounted and hospitable roof at the coming of the

"Ye come from over on Cripple The boy flashed the question shin?" with a sudden hardening of the voice and, when he was affirmatively ansabove her. The forest blanket was swered, his eyes contracted and bored searchingly into the stranger's face.

"Where'd ve put up last night?" "Red Bill Hollman's house, at the mouth of Meeting House fork; do you know the place?"

Samson's reply was curt.

"I knows hit all right." the rail fence, looking absently down rather an awkward pause. Lescott's mind began piecing together fragments of conversation he had heard, Samson South was not, strictly until he had assembled a sort of men-

The South-Hollman feud had been indolent on the top rail of the fence, mentioned by the more talkative of his hands hanging over his knees, his his informers, and carefully tabooed hoe forgotten. Near by, propped by others-notable among them his host of last night. It now dawned on rffle, though the people would have him that he was crossing the boundary and coming as the late guest of the ring of determined authority. a Hollman to ask the hospitality of a South.

"I didn't know whose house it was," he hastened to explain, "until I was friend an' foe alike. I reckon Jesse benighted and asked for lodging. They Purvy knows who got yore pap, but were very kind to me. I'd never seen up till now no South hain't never them before. I'm a stranger here-

Samson only nodded. If the explanation failed to satisfy him, it at least citement as he flashed out his retort. seemed to do so.

"I reckon ye'd better let me holp ye up on thet old mule," he said; 'hit's a-comin' on ter be night."

With the mountaineer's aid, Lescott clambered astride the mount, then he turned dubiously.

"I'm sorry to trouble you," he ventured, "but I have a paint box and some materials up there. If you'll bring them down here, I'll show you farmers are taking their ease after the how to pack the easel, and, by the hard work of harvest. The principal way," he anxiously added, "please character is a weird figure supposed to handle that fresh canvas carefullyby the edge-it's not dry yet.

He had anticipated impatient contempt for his artist's impedimenta, but to his surprise the mountain boy climbed the rock and halted before the sketch with a face that slowly softened to an expression of amazed square of academy board with a tender care of which his rough hands the animal, but in reality to satisfy would have seemed incapable and the dancers, presents of money, paddy stood stock still, presenting an anoma- or rice are given to the performers. lous figure in his rough clothes as his This custom has been in existence eyes grew almost idolatrous. Then from time immemorial and is likely creator, and, though no word was dures among the Hindus of Malabar .spoken, there flashed between the eyes | Wide World Magazine. "Why hain't it?" demanded the girl. of the artist, whose signature gave to a canvas the value of a precious stone and the jeans-clad boy whose destiny was that of the vendetta, a subtle, wordless message. It was the countersign of brothers-in-blood who rec- behaved with perfect propriety, and ognize in each other the bond of a mutual passion.

The boy and the girl, under Lescott's direction, packed the outfit and stored the square white mint on the plate the canvas in the protecting top of the at the side of the bowl, and exstrode down creek in search of Les- cunning little cakes of soap he cott's lost mount, the two men rode brought us!"-Harper's Magazine.

"What air hit?" she tensely demand- upstream in silence. Finally Samson

"Stranger," he ventured, "ef hit hain't askin' too much, will ye let me see ye paint one of them things?" "Gladly," was the prompt reply. Then the boy added covertly:

"Don't say nothin' erbout hit ter none of these folks. They'd devil me." The dusk was falling now, and the hollows choking with murk.

"We're nigh home now," said Samson at the end of some minutes' silent plodding. "Hit's right beyond thet thar bend." Then they rounded a point of timber and came upon a small party of men whose attitudes even in the dim ming light conveyed a subtle sugges tion of portent. "Thet you, Samson?" called an old man's voice, which was still very deep

"Hello, Unc' Spencer!" replied the Then followed a silence unbroken until the mule reached the group, revealing that besides the boy another man-and a strange man-had joined

"Evenin', stranger," they greeted him, gravely; then again they fell silent, and in their silence was evident constraint.

"This hyar man's a furriner," announced Samson, briefly. "He fell offen a rock an' got hurt. I 'lowed I'd fotch him home ter stay all night," The elderly man who had hailed the boy nodded, but with an evident annoyance. It seemed that to him the others deferred as to a commanding rode slowly toward the house. At last the elderly man came alongside the mule and inquired:

Tamarack South.

"Samson, where was ye last night?" "Thet's my business."

"Mebbe hit ain't." The old moun taineer spoke with no resentment, but deep gravity. "We've been powerful oneasy erbout ye. Hev ye heered the

"What news?" The boy put the question noncommittally, "Jesse Purvy was shot this morn-

The boy vouchsafed no reply. "The mail rider done told hit. . Somebody shot five shoots from the . . . Purvey hain't died yit. Some says as how his folks has sent ter Lexington fer blood-hounds." The boy's eyes began to smolder hatefully.

"I reckon," he spoke slowly, "he didn't git shot none too soon. "Samson!" The old man's voice had "When I dies ye'll be the head of the Souths, but so long es I'm a-runnin' this hyar fam'ly I keeps my word ter ousted no truce." The boy's voice dropped its softness and took on a shrill crescendo of ex-Who said a South has done busted the truce this time?"

Old Spicer South gazed searchingly at his nephew.

The Godavari dance of the malay

(TO BE CONTINUED.) Queerest Dance in the World.

ers, or drummers, of Malabar is a very popular function when the native to represent the sacred cow of the gods, Kamachenu. A small boy carries this about while the other performers, decked out in primitive fashion with painted bodies and hideous masks, go through a welrd dance, accompanied by much drum beating and singing. Wherever it goes the com admiration. Finally he took up the is supposed to shower blessings and prosperity, and so, ostensibly to please

What, Attracted Him.

he brought the landscape over to its to continue as long as agriculture en- rich. He didn't get rich very fast, A mother took her four-year-old son to a restaurant for his first luncheon outside of the nursery at home. watched the elaborate service with keen interest. When the finger bowls were placed on the table, he noticed

JEKYLL AND HYDE LIFE IS BARED

"Society" Burglar of New York Confesses to An Amazing Criminal Career.

DECEIVES WIFE

Herbert Eaton, Posing as Model Business Man, Performs Daring Crim-Inal Acts in Gotham-Dance Partners Victims.

New York.-Herbert Eaton, New York city's daring "society" burglar and thief, who was recently mortally shot by a detective while attempting to escape from the sleuth, has confessed to having stolen last year gems worth $15,000 from Miss Marie H. Kohn, daughter of a Paris banker. Eaton, a dapper, stylish, socially interesting young man, posed as a model family man. He lived quietly with his wife and baby in a stylish apartment. Seldom did this Jekyll and Hyde being go out a night.

Burglar Deceives Wife. His devoted wife knew nothing of the criminal side of her husband. Eaton, however, not taking his wife into his financial confidence, spent much more than his salary as secretary. Ocasionally, he would mix in the gay throngs at the expensive hotels, where his acquaintance was wide, now postng as Williams, now as Eaton, and at other times as Brown. Eaton did not patronize the dancing places frequented by the gayest of the gay. He chose for his tango-tea appearances resorts frequented almost wholly by persons of acknowledged social standing and unquestioned wealth. He cared nothing for meeting beautiful women of slender finances; he cared only to dance attendance upon matrons possessing jewels of great value. To such women, the "society" burglar made himself agreeable. He danced well, talked well, appeared well, and lied well Eaton Meets a Victim.

It was at the exclusive Hotel Astor that Eaton met Mrs. Gertrude Pike, a New York woman of wealth and posttion. He tangoed with her under the name of Williams, chatted with her, took teas with her, making himself an entertaining companion. Mrs. Pike

Fired on the Fleeing Man and Brought Him Down. introduced to him in good faith by an old friend, a woman, gladly accepted Eaton's proffered escort home after a tango-tea at the Hotel Astor. During the trip to Mrs. Pike's home, her handbag dropped, scattering its contents. Eaton picked up the things, failing, however, to put into a bag a key to Mrs. Pike's apartment. The next afternoon the apartment of Mrs. Pike was robbed of money and valuable jewels. She reported to the police.

Eaton Falls Into a Trap. In a few days Mrs. Pike received letter from Williams stating her fewels would be returned to her upon payment of $500. The letter was turned over to the police. A trap was laid, and Williams appeared at the appointed time, according to his own arrangement, to get the money from Mrs. Pike. At a given signal, detectives pounced on Eaton and took him to a station house. There the captain ordered him removed to jail, and, as he was being taken out of the station house the thief made a break. Detectives fired on the fleeing man and brought him down. Wanted Sudden Riches.

It appears Eaton is a Welshman, who came to the United States to get but he wrote home glowing letters of his "prosperity." To his devoted wife he gave some of the costly gems he stole, saying they were given him by his admiring friend, "Colonel Carter of Carterville." Other stolen jewels he gave his wife he said he had bought out of the profits he made in dealing in stocks. Papers were found in his apartment showing the man had had extensive, losing transactions in stocks. He also gambled to a considerable extent. Successfully, however, he concealed his double life from his wife and from her sister.

VOU'LL like Fatimas a really delightful, mild Turkish blend. Try the taste of their choice leaf that has made FATIMA the greatest selling brand in the land.

If you cannot secure Fatima Cigarettes from your dealer, we will be pleased to send you three packages postpaid on receipt of 50c. Address Fatims Dept., 212 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y.

"Distinctively Individual"

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

SCORED ONE ON THE HOTEL

Simeon Ford Tells How He Once Entertained Guest With Lively Sense of Humor.

Simeon Ford, who accomplished the extraordinary feat of running the Grand Union Hotel and being a humorist of nation-wide reputation at the same time, and, now that the hotel is defunct, is presumably turning his whole attention to the convulsing of dinner guests over their coffee, expressed himself with much modesty in reply to a question of the Boston Herald.

"I never tell stories," wrote he, "nor can I remember them." That looked damaging. But presently Mr. Ford brightened up amazingly and finished his communication in this way:

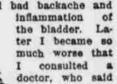

"Here is a bit of humor, however, and a true hotel happening: "Our steward had printed on the bills of fare the following notice: "'All articles brought into the hotel and used at the table will be charged for as though furnished by the house. "Some one mailed me one of these bills and under the notice he had written: "'Does this apply to false teeth?""

SUFFERED FOR FOUR YEARS.

Mr. J. M. Sinclair of Olivehill, Tenn., writes: "I strained my back, my kidneys and weakened caused an awful bad backache and that I had Diabetes and my near Mr. J. M. Sinclair. ed for four years and was in a nervous state and very much depressed. The doctor's medicine didn't help me, so I decided to try Dodds Kidney Pills, and I cannot say enough to express my relief and thankfulness, as they cured me. Diamond Dinner Pills cured me of Constipation.' Dodds Kidney Pills, 50c, per box at your dealer or Dodds Medicine Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Household Hints, also music of National Anthem (English and German words) and recipes for dainty dishes. All 3 sent free.

War and Life Insurance. "I inquired of a man high up in the affairs of a big life insurance company whether the killing of so many soldiers will bring heavy losses upon American life insurance companies. Far smaller than you might think, was his answer. 'It is true one New York company has $400,000,000 of insurance in the countries which are at war, but the number of soldiers killed will be but a small proportion of all the sople who carry insurance."

A Mistake. Wife-James, you are going out without your muffler. Autoist-I cut it out.

The United States is this year spending $40,000,000 for new church buildings.

Remember

It is wise to get rid quickly of ailments of the organs of digestion-of headache, languor, depression of spirits-the troubles for which the best corrective is

WHY NOT TRY POPHAM'S WILLIAMS MFG. CO., Props., Clevelan