Hicks for December: Storms of rain, wind and snow will be in progress over much of the country on the 1st and 2d, with change to rising barometer, northwest winds and much colder weather following promptly from western extremes. Between the 2d and 5th, the progressive high barometer and cold from northwest will make themselves felt over most parts of the country. A stationary storm period is central on the 5th and 6th. About the 5th warmer weather and falling barometer will begin to the westward, and from that date until after full moon on the 8th, rising temperatures, falling barometer and storms of rain, wind and snow will be general.
Do not forget that the storm areas travel from west to east, occupying from two to four days in their transits across the country, but covering no section, as a rule, more than a day or two continuously. The disturbance about 6th to 8th, will bring heavy winds and rain, with winter lightning and thunder to the south, turning to snow and ending in a sharp cold wave, northward. It will be prudent to anticipate all the cold waves, in greater or less severity, far southward during this month. The 10th to 15th will bring severe storms. About the 11th to 13th, low barometer, wind, rain and snow in all sections in their eastward progress. Dangerous blizzards during this period. From 16th to 18th, high barometer, reacting into unsettled weather with snow and rain. From 21st to 25th, very marked storm period. A general and free cold wave will be the sequel of these storms. The 29th and 30th, will bring reaction to warmer, with rain and snow.

questions are accepted as authorities.
