From the information obtained by the Minneapolis trust experts, the conclusion has been reached that wheat destruction has been confined to localities, within which the loss is enormous, but the crop in general has been affected to a much smaller percentage than was originally figured. From two points in South Dakota, Lincoln and Day counties, comes the assertion that wheat fields on high ground were more severely attacked by rust than fields on low ground, which does not sustain the theory that the visitation was caused by an excess of moisture. It is the late conclusion in Minneapolis that, in spite of heavy losses in localities, there is still a chance for a fair wheat yield from the three northwestern states.

A plea for a change will fall on deaf ears if the voter remembers that the United States has made a remarkable advance in all material interests in the last four years.

It will be a little awkward for democratic operators to explain that they not only support the party platform, but also the private views of the candidates as expressed in telegrams and confidential letters.

Ernest P. Ware, of Deadwood has been appointed superintendent of construction in the treasury department at a salary of $3,000 per annum.

London Health: It is good to laugh. There is probably not the remotest corner or little inlet of the minute blood vessels of the body that does not feel some wavelet from the great convulsion produced by hearty laughter shaking the central man. The blood moves rapidly—probably its chemical, electric, or vital condition is distinctly modified.

It conveys a different impression to all the organs of the body as it visits them on that particular mystic journey when the man is laughing from what it does at other times. The time may come when physicians will prescribe to a torpid patient so many peals of laughter to be undergone at such and such a time.

HOW JAPANESE MEET DEATH

Striking Heroism of Soldiers on a Transport.

SINKING OF THE KINSHUMARU.

Fragile End of Officers and Men When the Vessel Was Torpedoed by Russians—Some Committed Suicide. Others Kept Up a Hot Fire and Sank Cheering and Singing.

Death rather than submission was the fate which was voluntarily chosen by the soldiers and others who were on board the transport Kinshumaru at Gensan when the Russian warships suddenly appeared on the scene. The Kobe Chronicle reprints from a native paper a most interesting account of this stirring incident of the war, says the London Telegraph. It appears that the men had been ashore scouting and had then re-embarked. The escorting torpedo boat destroyer flotilla put to sea and the transport followed, but soon the vessels were separated in a fog, and when this lifted the Kinshumaru, thinking the squadron to be the ships, Captain Yagi of the Kinshumaru, thinking the squadron to be the Japanese, altered her course and steered toward the warships, when the signal "Stop" floating from the mainmast and the firing of a blank shot across the Kinshumaru's bows brought the ship to a standstill. This turn of events naturally caused surprise and astonishment on board the transport, but nothing could be done in the way of escaping. Lieutenant Commander Mizoguchi, who had charge of the work of the transport, proposed visiting the warships and taking such measures as required by circumstances. This was agreed to be the best course, and, having said farewell to the military officers in command of the troops and accompanied by Captain Yagi, Paymaster Iida and an interpreter, Mr. Kondo, the lieutenant commander rowed to the nearest warship, whence, as is known, the party never returned and are now prisoners of war at Irkutsk.

On board the Kinshumaru the military officers assembled in the saloon and took counsel as to their course of action. The officers were Captain Shilina, Captain Sakurai, Lieutenant Terada, Lieutenant Yokota and Ensign Higaki. After the conference Captain Shilina went into the between decks, where the men had been ordered to assemble, and gave orders as to the course to be taken by them. Meanwhile both the transport and the warships had been lowering boats, and three officers boarded the Kinshumaru and ordered the troops to lay down their arms and surrender, stating that if they did so they would be taken on board the warships. The soldiers were given an hour in which to arrive at a decision, and having allowed the crew of the steamer and the passengers to take to the boats the naval officers returned to the squadron.

It was now past midnight, with a bright moon and clear sky. A great silence prevailed on the transport, which now had only troops on board and a few bluejackets and coolies. Captain Shilina once again inspected his men, who were found in perfect order, some motionless, but others fixing bayonets or loading their rifles, preparing for the end. Sergeant Major Washi was collecting the maps, sketches, etc., kept by the officers. Sergeant Okano gathered in the note books of the men, and maps and note books were thrown into the engine room fire. A corporal ordered the men to take off the numbers on their shoulder straps so that everything should be destroyed which would prove of any value to the enemy afterward.

It was past 1 o'clock on the morning of April 20 when the Russians discharged a torpedo against the fore part of the transport. On this Captain Shilina went into the 'tween decks and freed the men from military discipline. They were told to take what course they thought fit, as nothing could be done to avert disaster. The men, anxious to know the fate of their officers, swarmed up the companionways to the saloon, found the doors locked and no sound issuing therefrom. Inside were the officers, who had agreed to sink with the steamer, imprisoned in the saloon so that they should not fall into the hands of the enemy. Particular and scrupulous to the last, the officers had persuaded Captain Sakurai, who did not belong to their regiment, of the inadvisability of his dying with them. Captain Sakurai, an old experienced officer, regarded by the general staff as one of the smartest officers of the army in northern Korea, left his comrades, and the manner of his death is unknown. According to report, however, it seems there was not perfect unanimity in the manner the officers should meet their death. It is stated that Lieutenant Terada dissented from the command of Captain Shilina that the officers should die together and left the ship vowing that he would sell his life to the enemy, but die fighting. What became of Lieutenant Terada is not known.

The end of the men was equally tragic. Some minutes after Captain Shilina had given his last commands, which left the soldiers to their own resources, Sergeant Kurisu and Corporal Horisaka committed suicide by shooting each other, and many followed this example. Sergeant Okano went on deck, drew his sword and committed harikari, an example, we are told, which was also followed by some of his men. A rather more soldierlike way of spending the last moments of their lives was that of Corporal Hashimoto and some sixty men, who from the deck fired repeatedly at the Russians by the corporal's command. The enemy replied with fatal effect, but the end of all was now near. Fifty minutes after the first torpedo was discharged a second torpedo struck the Kinshumaru and nearly cut the vessel into two parts. It sank in thirteen minutes, but during this time a hot fire was kept up by the Japanese, who went down with the ship, cheering and singing the march song of their regiment.

The final stage of this chapter of the war is well known—how about sixty of the men succeeded in getting clear of the ship, either before or after she sank, and reaching the coast, but there were noncombatants whose fate is quite uncertain, bluejackets and coolies, whom it is thought possible the Russians may have picked up afterward. The end of many on board the Kinshumaru is one more striking example of the heroism with which men can be inspired when the alternative to death is surrender and the sense of military disgrace.

WILL USE CUT-OVER LANDS.

Big Grazing Project Planned for Northern Minnesota.

Two Harbors, Minn., Aug. 10.—A party of stockmen and capitalists, mostly from Chicago, are forming a company for the purpose of buying and utilizing for cattle grazing purposes the great stretches of cut-over lands in Northern Minnesota.

Thousands of acres of cut-over lands are to be found in this section of the state and as it has been stripped of all marketable timber it is now practically valueless to the lumber companies and others who own it. All of these tracts are thickly covered with wild grass, while in many places where logging was carried on more extensively timber and clover is found in abundance, making the finest grazing lands to be found.
