

When I began business at eighteen years of age 1 entered the counting room of Stoughton Bros, on a salary of $4 a week. I had assurance enough for ten men of my age, and it is assurance that tells. I have often wondered why this is so largely the case and bave P. S. I had no reverence for my superiors, but treated them with eminent respect except when they undertook to browbeat me, when I jumped on them with both feet. This I kept up as long as 1 was paid little or nothing for my serv fces; when 1 felt it essential to retain my position 1 didn't take so many chances.

There was a banker in the street by the name of Ogden. He did an enormous business and was very rich. To us clerks he was like the mogul of Tartary to a washee-washee Chinaman. Not that he put on any airs, but because his position was so lofty. I used to hear stories about how he got his start and learned that he went into the cotton market one day $50,000 in debt and in a few months was $300,000 to the good. At the time I entered business he was worth millions.

not being troubled with backwardness. I was a butterfly of fashion. My capital was one dress suit, which, notwithstanding my youth, was too small for me, but for 50 cents 1 got a tailor to enlarge it. At functions 1 used to meet men who were the heads of large business concerns, as well as of fami lies. Some of them I occasionally went to during business hours on business, with my but in my hand. But. meeting them socially. I considered that while we were on a different basis it behooved me to keep up an outward show of deference. Time passed, and my salary, though slightly enlarged, was far too small for my requirements. The elbows of my dress coat were getting ragged. and it was impossible for any tailor to hide their nakedness. I did fairly good work myself in that respect with ink Some of my fellow clerks got small raises by being obsequious to those above them, but I kept on in the even tenor of my way-that is, being ordinarily respectful and standing up for my rights. It didn't occur to me that it would pay me to toady to a man for the purpose of getting an additional two or three dollars'a week.

One spring we had a heavy snow storm, followed by a freeze and then a deluge of rain. There's no worse meteorological combination for transportation than this, and the city was well nigh impassable. There were large John Minder, sheriff fees

Antiquity of Spectacles.

The ordinary magnifying spectacles with convex lenses came into use some time near the end of the thirteenth centary. Their invention is generally attributed to two Italians, Armati and Spina. As a matter of fact at this time old people in Germany were wearing glasses. According to G. H. Oliver, writing in the British Medical Journal, the first use of concave lenses was of much later date, probably not until the middle of the sixteenth century. It appears that at first the doc-tury. In these early days their use was limited for many reasons. They were clumsy and ill shaped, making the wearer con-spicuous and subjecting him to ridicule oftentimes of far from gentle type.
