Whereas, that two men, thresher by profession and pilferers by nature, were seen at the car early in the morning, exploring, examining and exhuming the parts and parcels thereof. And therefore, said thresher hands are awaiting trial at the coming term of court under what those versed in the making, examining and enforcing of laws call "malicious mischief."

The other day when Walter Varland was going home his car—as even the best tempered and gentle of cars have a habit of doing now and then—refused to do his bidding and after arguing the case with it for awhile he abandoned it, leaving it by the wayside until morning, when he came out again to see if any improvement had been made in its disposition. The disposition had been attended to, as some party or parties had visited the car during his absence, and made disposition of everything detachable. The car was brought into town, and after being inspected by most of the male population of Sisseton, the nearest and dearest, next of kin, friends, neighbors, witnesses, and near witnesses met in conference at Judge Prindiville's office, where the following evidence was deduced, to-wit:

A week or so ago, Jim Morrill received a shock from which he hasn't fully recovered yet—wonders still occasionally, if it did really happen, or if he dreamed it. And then the presence of a letter in his coat pocket makes him know it was no dream, because if he did dream it the letter wouldn't be there. It happened in this way: About seven years ago Jim was in the habit of cashing checks which a fellow who worked in a newspaper office was in the habit of writing in his father's name. Jim knew of course that anyone who worked in a newspaper office would naturally be a good fellow, and so the fellow kept writing them and Jim cashed them and father sanctioned them. But finally one comes along that daddy refused to sign. It cost Jim not only the money for the check but something like $2.50 protest fees besides. Jim, like the good fellow he is, forgot the circumstance until the other night when he received a check not only for the amount, but the protest fees added and compound interest on the whole thing and a letter signed "from a deadbeat friend." It seems the check maker had gone west and presumably made his fortune—probably continuing the newspaper business. Well, Jim is forty odd dollars to the good and his faith in humanity is deepened.

All those whose subscriptions have expired will be taken off the mailing list unless they are paid up before the first of November. If you want our paper, you evidently expect to pay for it. If you don't expect to pay for it we would rather have you borrow it from some one who is paid up.
