

Old Coughs

Keep in close touch with your family doctor. No medicine was ever made that could take his place. Trust him at all times.

Old coughs, desperate coughs, rasping coughs, extremely perilous coughs, coughs that shake the whole body. It takes a strong medicine, a doctor's medicine, to master such coughs. A great many people rely on Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

SIDELIGHTS

The senator did not speak at a rapid rate, not more than 125 words a minute on an average, he delivered something like 135,000 words. The speech when transcribed from the stenographers' notes weighed 20 pounds, and when the messenger delivered it at the senator's residence for revision, before printing in the Congressional Record, he had to use a wagon.

The revision would have been easy had La Follette merely read from the printed documents he used without break. But he made the occasion interesting for his audience, as well as difficult for the stenographers, by interspersing his own ideas unexpectantly between the printed ones.

Watching for the faintest response to treatment, a corps of eye specialists are determining this week whether there is any hope of senator Thomas P. Gore, the brilliant statesman from Oklahoma, ever regaining his sight, lost 30 years ago. The senator long ago despaired of ever seeing again, and the present attempt comes solely in response to the pleading of his faithful wife, who accompanies him wherever he goes, whether it be on the stump or the sessions of the senate. She believes there may still be a chance of his seeing. When specialist after specialist, upon examining his eyes and reporting that the optic nerve was totally dead, advised that there was no hope, she continued her search for an oculist who was not positive. One was found in Washington.

"Senator Gore has not allowed himself to be optimistic," said Mrs. Gore when her husband went to the hospital. "He will not be greatly disappointed, should the experiment fail. Should it succeed, we will be rejoiced, although both the senator and I have become so accustomed to his blindness that it would be almost like starting in life again."

The senator is sensitive over important questions about the manner in which he lost his sight. When eight years old he was struck in the left eye with a boy's arrow. The eye was permanently injured. Three years later he bought an air-gun. By like, he looked down the barrel one day and the little shot entered his right eye, completely destroying it.

Later he went to a hospital and his sight was sufficiently restored to his left eye to enable him to play games, and to distinguish objects. Gradually the sight dimmed again, and he was totally blind within a few months.

Once he went to Chicago to see an oculist, but becoming engaged in other matters returned home without seeing the specialist. The senator himself has not much faith in eye doctors.

Profiting by the example of Kansas farmers hiring young college students as harvesting hands, Herbert Knox Smith, commissioner of corporations, is employing collegians as trust busters.

The Bureau of Corporations requires, year by year, the services of a large number of men competent to do research work of various kinds. The bureau is constantly being ordered by congress to investigate something. Men are needed who can fairly appraise moral and social values, who will enter their work with the highest attitude of mind, who have not acquired prejudices and predilections, and who have no reason for misrepresenting what they discover.

After a good deal of experimenting, the bureau has developed a theory that young men just out of college, post graduates, students between the junior and senior years, and young professors, are the ones on the whole best fitted for this sort of work.

Not long ago, Smith talked of the possibilities of government service to a group of young men at the Nebraska university, at Lincoln, Neb., and as a result several are making money this summer at trust busting. The same experiment was tried successfully at the University of Pennsylvania.

"Because the chap with a disposition to earn his way through college is pretty certain to have something in him worth getting out," as Commissioner Smith puts it, he prefers the fellow who is paying for his own education.

No Need of Suffering from Rheumatism.

It is a mistake to allow anyone to suffer from rheumatism, as the pain can always be relieved, and in most cases a cure effected by applying Chamberlain's Liniment. The relief from pain which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. It makes sleep and rest possible. Even in cases of long standing this liniment should be used on account of the relief which it affords. Do not be discouraged until you have given it a trial. For sale by Dr. Stone's drug store.
